KALEIDOSCOPE

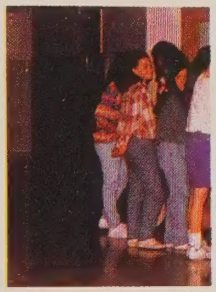
Kaleidoscope n. 1. an optical tube in which bits of glass and beads are shown in changing symmetrical forms by reflection in mirrors as the tube is turned. 2. anything that shifts continually. 3. 1600 students in one building seven hours a day, five days a week.



The shifting, changing atmosphere at Mount Vernon reflected students as they interacted, learned, and grew older. Unsettled freshmen changed into individual personalities that formed a colorful, complex pattern. Older students continued metamorphasis and befriended new students. Fluxion and movement created an unpredictable variegated school.

Interosculating with others at Mount Vernon gave students, teachers, and staff a new perspective on life. Jen Saks, Grant Graeber, Brein Langsdorf

Student Life

The shifting and changing activity of a kaleidoscope reflected the variety of activities that students participated in. Co-curricular, extra-curricular, or just for fun, students could be found doing anything on the weekends or weekdays. Shopping, partying, and 'hanging out' proved to be dependable staples- but often took second place to some of the things students dreamed up.

Students' lives were impacted by a number of things- American troops in Bosnia, the Bobbit trials, and Beavis and Butthead to name a few. "New things are always happening and school is always changing," said sophomore Josh Abbot. "The kids who go to this school do a lot of things in their spare time, everybody has a different favorite activity," said senior Lora Saada. Jen Saks

individuals stand out with their own orginality

"I like to think I have a style of my own. I don't really follow the trends. Fashion is all about looking different, a form of expression. You are what you wear," said senior Gia Gulino.

"I don't like to copy people, I wear what I like, not what everybody else likes. Fashion is constantly changing, who knows what comes next!" said senior Brien Langsdorf.

Style, class, a grace or polish in a person's manner or actions.

This is a school where style shines. "Style is being self-confident, and not worrying about what others think of you," said sophomore Oliver Sharpe.

People chose to express themselves in many diverse ways. Some felt that style could be achieved by fitting in. "Style is very easy, you just check out what other people wear and what is in the magazines," said freshmen Ann Harris. Others were more casual about the issue, "Style is what you feel like wearing that day," said junior Sang Peth.

Whether a member of the group, or striking out on your own, people find a way to express themself through their own personal style. Jon Kimball, 12

students rally for spirit competitions

It all started on a Monday. From baseball caps to shower caps, slippers to rollers, mismatched clothing to opposite gender, spirit week began.

Hat day started spirit week off with the freshmen class wearing ski caps, the sophomores with cowboy hats, baseball caps for the juniors, and the seniors displayed their shower caps.

Classes wore their designated colors given by the junior class officers for the second day, and for the third day, students wore bed attire ranging from slippers to teddy bears.

On the fourth day, which was mismatch day, the freshmen class showed their spirit that day by wearing mismatched clothes while the sophomores wore their clothes backwards, juniors wore mismatched shoes and the senior class wore clothes of the opposite sex. "I thought the senior guys were hilarious! It was very amusing seeing them dressed up as girls!" said junior Cathy Marlatt.

Spirit week was wrapped up on Friday with a pep rally. Each class performed their Homecoming skit and a class call was given. Students showed school spirit by wearing school colors, however the senior class wore all black with maroon ribbons.

In the end, the class of 94' won spirit week for the second time in a row. Barbara O'Leary, 12

Dressed as the opposite gender, seniors Adam Thomas and Becky Minton talk to their fellow students. Minton and Thomas participated in all of the spirit activities.

DRESS UP

activity fills the air, homecoming is here

It was that time of the year again. Students needed a chance to just relax and chill, even if it was just for one weekend.

For homecoming the junior class brought back the homecoming floats in addition to the regular subschool decorations and spirit week competitions. The theme this year was T.V. shows. The seniors choose The Addams Family while the juniors had Star Trek. The sophomores picked Sesame Street and the freshmen chose the MTV show, Lip Service. "It was great to see my class pull together to make the float and subschool decorations. It really brought out a lot of class spirit," said sophomore Liz Gerloff.

Finally the big night arrived. The stands were packed with enthusiastic students ready to cheer on the Majors. Unfortunately Washington Lee won, 41 to 20.

Weeks before the festivities on October 22nd and 23rd, the homecoming court was chosen. Brandi Carter and Richard Johnson were named the 1993 Homecoming King and Queen.

The dance the night after the big game proved to be a huge success. Students grabbed the chance to dress up and dance to a slow song with that someone special. Senior Lan-Chi Dawson said, "I had a good time, even though I can't dance. I had fun with my boyfriend and friends."

Homecoming really wasn't about whether or not we won the game, it was about having a good time and showing spirit for your class. Terrie DiPrimo, 11

friends provided comfort and companionship

"Somebody who has a loyal friend is the richest person in the world," said senior Nazia Ali.

Students felt that friends were always there to be confided in, to laugh with and to just be around when things were good or bad. "A friend is a part of a person's heart," said senior Shazia Khan.

But some friends were something more. They went the extra mile, and could be trusted with anything. They're your best friend and they were to be treasured about all else. Senior Randa Slater said, "Having a wonderful best friend like Susan Bohn only happens once in a lifetime."

Some friendships require a lot of understanding and time. "Real friendship to me, is when you know someone long enough to really trust them," said senior Edwhar Nunez.

"The quality that I best share with my friends is the ability to fight with them, then making up. Afterwards, we laugh about it and realize it wasn't anything big," said sophomore Chaka Bailey. Friends will always be with us, and they deserve the best we've got to give them.

In Physics class, seniors Pat Hickey and Alan Johnson ponder on the problem given to them by physics teacher, Mr. Andrew Gerard. Hickey and Johnson were often known as "class clowns".

PASTTIME

Students found a hobby to keep themselves busy

Between juggling difficult courses and participating in activities, students still found time for favorite hobbies ranging from stamp collecting, to collecting quotes. Said Senior Gia Gulino, "I like to collect quotes because I like to think about what other people thought."

Hobbies served as a way for students to be able to explore their creative side. Courses offered at school allowed them to study or practice their hobby. "Drawing is a way for me to express myself," said junior Heidi Kelly, who hoped to be an art therapist in the future.

Career aspirations of the students led many to practice a hobby. Senior Melody Westmeyer said, "Flying is an expensive, but rewarding experience. I think of it as a career move."

Extracurricular activities offered the students to have more experience with it. Sophomore Justin Lucas said, "This year I did not take a Theatre Arts class, but I still have been able to try out for school productions here."

No matter what the hobby was, it was a way for students to enjoy other things besides worrying about the pressures of school.Sochenda Dan,12

student couples show love and affection

"It's always nice to have someone that cares for your well being. Sometimes just the sight of your distinguished other helps you get through the day," said senior Dennis Morris.

Everywhere students went, couples were getting together, breaking up or smiling in bliss. For some couples it was love at first sight. Other relationships progressed over time. "The first time I saw my boyfriend, I knew that he was the one. It only took a couple of days to convince him of the same thing," said sophomore Autumn Girouard.

Couples shared good times, built memories, and strengthed friendships. Some couples found that their other half turned out to be their best frend. "I'm really lucky that I have Barrett Hill because he's not only my boyfriend, he's also my best friend," said junior Monika Zakar.

Some students found that it was better to date around than to stick with one person. "I date around to meet new people, that way you don't miss out on anything," said senior Pachi Morales.

Whether a long lasting romance, or a brief fling, students viewed relationships as being important. Barbara O'Leary, 12

What's your most embarassing moment?

"My freshman year when I walked out of the bathroom with my skirt tucked into my panty hose", said senior Heather Bolton.

"At Camp Hemlock, I swung on a rope and tried to get across a mudpit. I didn't make it and I fell in. Everyone was laughing including my best friends", said senior Sochenda Dan.

"When I tripped and fell flat on my face", said sophomore Keala Murdoch.

"When I got stuck in this bucket. My friend tried to help me get out, we were laughing so hard that I peed", said freshman Kathleen Kinkella.

"Once my oversized slip fell to the floor while I read aloud a summary of a book", said senior Maimoona Bah.

Study study study. The sound of hundreds of students studying filled the halls during school. After school, the sound seemed to emanate from the library.

Administrators resorted to a tricky ploy to help students on their SATs. A 'word of the day' was announced every day in the morning announcements. Some students were tested every Friday on the words of that week. During February, an inspirational quote authored by a black man or woman was read during morning announcements in honor of black history month.

The pace slowed down considerably on Wednesdays and Thursdays after second quarter for block scheduling. Enabled to swallow immense chunks of knowledge in one sitting, students often left blocked classes feeling slightly woozy. However, block scheduling allowed teachers time for experiments and in-depth study. "I think block scheduling is good and we should do it every day," said sophomore Candice Mersah.

Senior Heather Bolton speaks to her teacher, Mrs. Wells, after class. Having good student-teacher relationships made learning business skills a lot easier, not to mention more enjoyable for both student and teacher.

Marcus Mills tackles the printer in his business class. Even football players took business classes, there was no single type of student to take business classes. Almost everyone could benefit from the valuble skills taught there.

Business
Dealing, Typing & Learning

Business education offers a variety of classes to prepare students for the business world. David Ferguson, a sophmore in Introduction to Business says, "I think it will be a great asset later in life." Sophmore Angel Baltimore said, "I took Business because I wanted to learn about the business world to help me improve business skills." Other business classes included Business Management, Typing, and Information Systems. Business students were enrolled in the Future Business Leaders of America (FBLA). David Lightowler, a senior, says, "Accounting is a lot of work, it takes a lot of time and effort to make sure every little detail is right. It is a real professional course to take but is easy if you make the effort."

In marketing classes students learned marketing skills. One marketing class was Fashion Merchandising. "Fashion is not as fun as you'd expect," said junior Mikelle Smith. All Marketing students were enrolled in An Association of Marketing Students (DECA). Margaret Fadden, 11

Sophomore Amy Park gazes at her monitor screen, hard at work in business class. In business class, students learned to manipulate numbers to their advantage, as well as tax laws.

Taking a break from all the difficult work in fashion class, sophmore Wendy Amaya turns to ask her teacher a question. Fashion Merchandising prooved to be a more strenuous class than most believed.

English

Grammar Be Easy

Although English class is still a staple of every high school students' schedule, the days of grammar lessons and spelling tests are long gone. Today's English class is is a place where experimentation and spontanaiety are often the rule and not the exception. Students now have a new degree of control over their journrey through English education.

Ninth and tenth grade classes studied world literature. Eleventh graders focused on American literature. Twelth graders studied world lierature also but they spent some time on British literature. The English department tried to adjust it's curriculum to an incresingly multicultural student body. Some classes were more literature-intensive than others. All classes included at least a little creative writing. Some English-related classes dealt in public-speaking and in forensics.

Student feelings on English were mostly dependant on what class they were in. Students took note of special acitivities. "We're doing TV commercials for Major News (a student produced video show).", said Michelle Marrero, 10. Barrett Hill, a junior, summarized his feelings saying, "you learn more than skills and language, you learn new ways to learn." Unquestionably, English class was an experience. Mike White, 11

Sophmore Amy Park looks over the shoulder of her friend Jennifer Reiley as she proffreads her paper. To make sure the papers were correct students helped each other proofread papers. In English classes students were given the opportunity to critique the work of others.

While the whole class is busy at work sophmore Kristen Markman tries to find a page. Learning about classic literature was a very important component of every English class at MVHS. Some students appreciated expanding their horizons with the classic material, while others found it extraneous and boring.

Priscilla Cole does her English work on the floor of Mr. Rosenfeld's classroom. Stretching out and relaxing often helped many students to concentrate better, whether reading or writing. Relaxing brought out the creativity in some people. English teachers increasingly realized the need for a more open and free environment.

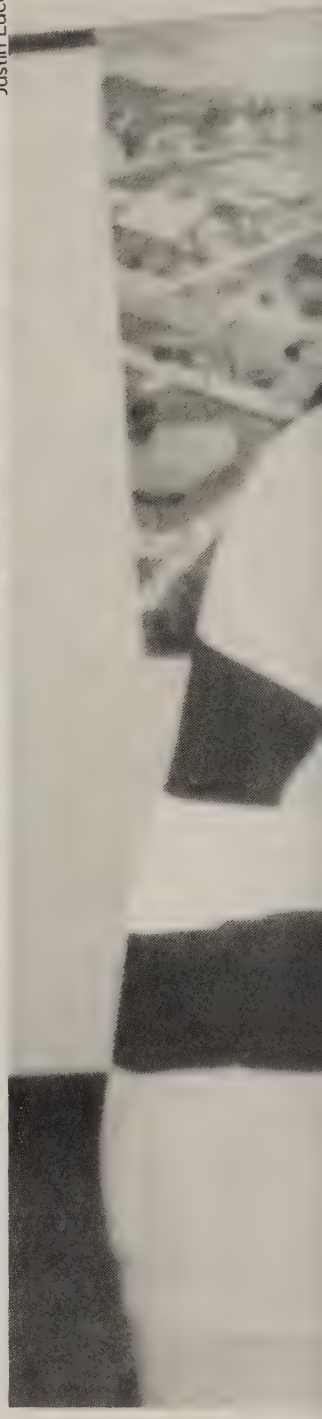
Ninth grade Gt English class forms a discussion group with special guest Mr. Rob Dyke, this year's student teacher from George Washington University. MVHS has always been very welcoming to student teachers. Student teachers and students had the opportunity to learn from each other.

Ann Alonzo, a junior, receives a pat on the back as she leaves her ESL classroom. Quick learning in ESL classes is largely a result of good student-teacher relationships and the consequent enjoyment of the program, not to mention the emersion into an English-speaking society.

Justin Lucas

Mrs. Pearce teaches English to a very attentive class of first year students. It was very important for these students to do well in class because it was necessary for them to speak the language outside of their class as well. Students in the ESL classes came from many different countries and spoke a variety of foreign languages.

Justin Lucas



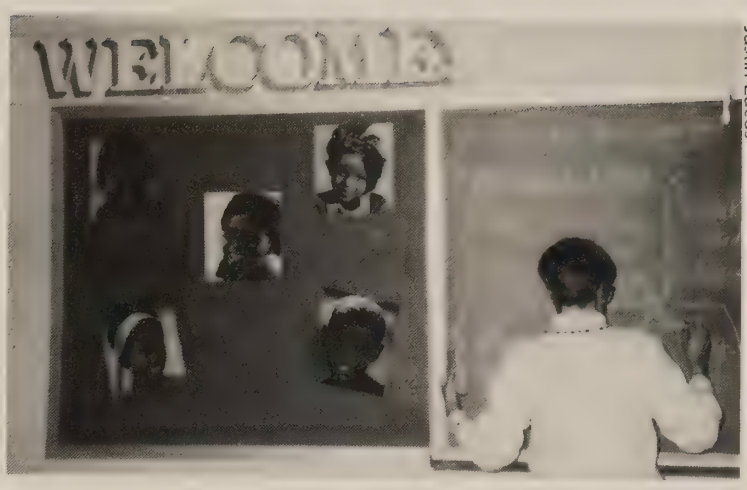
A New Language

ESL is difficult, but fun.

"ESL is the beginning of English. In ESL, you learn how to talk with other students." ESL (English as a Second Language) offers students who come from a culture that speaks another language to learn the language of their new environment. According to the students, it's not an easy class. "ESL is harder than English.", said Peter Kim, a sophmore. "Taking English is hardest thing for ESL Students.", said Ju-Myong-Yang, a freshman. Some ESL students felt it was harder to understand English that was spoken to them than written English.

Besides the difficulty of learning a new language, the students in ESL do not all have the same native language. Mount Vernon is very diverse in terms of the native countries of the students. Despite these difficulties, though, students generally enjoy the class. Rebecca Duarte, a junior, says "In ESL, we learn English and play. I like to sit with my friends and because we meet cute guys."
Being in ESL did not mean that a student was not a contributor to life at Mount Vernon. Many ESL students took some regular classes and ESL students contributed to extracurricular events such as Hispanic Night.

Justin Lucas



Justin Lucas

Ms. Poodiak writes the day's lesson on the board in her ESL classroom. Students in ESL classes learned English by reading extensively, both fiction and non-fiction, by writing, by reading, and by speaking. Being immersed in an English-speaking environment made teaching easier, especially since the teachers don't always know the native languages of their students.

Justin Lucas

Freshman, Edgui Aguilar, receives help from his teacher, Mrs. Pearce. ESL students enjoyed their classes and consequently worked very hard. Student projects had varying degrees of difficulty, but they were usually rather fun. The learning of English was often combined with the learning of everything else.

ESL students, Ebenezer Amfo, Edgui Aguilar, Shafio Rehman, and Hedrix Murillo gather around their teacher. ESL classes were comprised of students of many different backrounds. The cultural differences were a source of learning and a sharing of cultures through friendships.

Fine Arts
Creating and Performing

The classes in which students not only learned skills but applied them, either through performances or publications, were considered the Fine and Practical arts. Music classes saw many changes this year. Mr. Mykle Lyons was the new Orchestra teacher this year. The new Chorus director was Ms. Ann Stahmer. Chorus, Orchestra, and Band traveled to numerous competitions this year and all continued to be in the award winning tradition of Mount Vernon High School.

Another Fine Arts class was Drama. Drama put on a show of one act plays early in the year. Later they put on the play Arsenic and Old Lace. "Art 2 is very educational and stimulating," said Joshua Abbot, a sophomre. Art classes continued to display their works in the art gallery outside the cafeteria.

The only publication that was also a full-flegded class this year was Journalism. Students continued to produce The Em Vee Hi monthly. The paper's goal this year was to bring people information that was new to them and to be as informative as possible. These classes proved to be very challenging but also very rewarding. Mike White, 11

Grant Graeber and Jamar Hicks engage in an informal musical arrangement piece in volving various musical instruments, more specifically, the bass guitar and the drums. Foreign Language

Learning culture through language

Whether it was "Bonjour", "Hola", "Guten Tag", or likewise. All Mt. Vernon students dealt with foreign language at some point in their high school careers. Students had four language options; French, Spanish, German, or Latin. All languages offered at least three regular courses and an AP level.

The first two years of classes focused on verb conjugation and vocabulary. In year three students took the first steps toward fluency. In addition there was a spanish class for fluent speakers. By the time they got to the AP level students were reading literature written in the language they were taking.

Foreign language classes got chances to apply their skills. The Spanish classes hosted a special "Hispanic Night" to honor Hispanic culture. A popular assignment was to make a poster that creatively illustrated a foreign vocabulary word. Extra credit was given to students who could bring in foreign magazines or musical recordings in a foreign language.

In French class, French III students gather around their teacher, Mr. Vinson, at the front of the room. French is a language that is steadily growing in popularity at Mt. Vernon High School. A rumored cause of this popularity was the kindness and wonderful teaching ability of its teachers.

Freshman Brooke Fisher finds the Spanish pronunciation extremely difficult. Some students needed to use special tongue relaxing techniques just to prevent cramps and pulled muscles. Spanish was the most popular of all the languages offered at Mt. Vernon High School and also a common "second" language in the area.

Home Economics

Skills to last a lifetime

For students interested in learning practical skills Home economics classes were a must. The first home ec. class most students took was called "The Business of Living". This class helped students understand the balance between work and family. Students assessed their own ability in various skills.

A popular pairing was the two half year courses of Gourmet Foods and International Foods. In the former students learned about planning and serving food in a gourmet style. They learned how to prepare fondue, pastries, hors d'oeuvres, and the like. In the latter students discovered how to prepare American regional, and international cuisine.

Other classes focused on interpersonal relationships and interior design. Home economics classes were clearly not for everyone. But those who took them got exactly what they wanted, which was practical skills.

Grant Graeber

Sophomores, Urey Hohney and Bernard Farmer, prepare a pie in their Gourmet Cooking class. Students in Home Ec learned more than the home living skills just to get them through their first few years of living on their own, they learned how to prepare and cook complex gourmet menu items.

Ms. Sarah Wagner works out complex math equations on the overhead projector. The overhead projector was essential in math classes because it was easier to write on and read than the chalkboard. Also it allowed teachers to prepare material in advance for display. Though archaic, this device was a math teachers' best friend.

Ms. Rivecco explains the square root of x. Abstract concepts were at the core of most high school math courses. Math was supposed to teach people different ways of thinking as well as how numbers work together. The higher the course, the more theoretical concepts were introduced.

Mathematics

The square root of life

Very few people went through a year of school without some kind of math class. Mount Vernon offered math classes ranging from the very basic to the very advanced. Most students started in either Introduction to Algebra or Algebra I. They moved on either through Geometry, Algebra II, and Trig, or they went on to Personal Financial Math. GT and advanced placement classes were also offered. Students were encouraged to take the path that best fit their needs.

For those who made it through quickly, Calculus was available. Personal Financial Math taught students ways of applying math skills in real life. Math classes gave students a constant battery of homework and study. They required more abstract thinking an memorization than most other classes. For most students the tests came early and often. "The more I learn the less I can remember.", said senior Melissa Von Arb. Mike White, 11.

Michael Lipford uses a calculator on a math assignment. Calcultors, once prohibited in school, were now valuable in modern math classes. Understanding of concepts was emphasized as opposed to the ability to perform perfect arithmetic. Students, though, were generally advised against having complex calculators.

Jeremiah Stokes, Brad Clark, and Jose Dobarco take notes in their math class. Despite technology, note taking was still essential to any class. In math notes served as essential tools for the understanding of topics not well explained in the textbook. They made things easier for students to understand.

Godfrey Williams and Kevin Humphreys discuss papers that they were given in P.E. class. P.E. was not just exercise. Students were taught the rules of certain sports and had to take tests on them periodically. The tests were usually multiple choice. It was easy for students to forget to study sometimes.

"I don't wanna dress out!!!"

So you really want to read the P.E. copy? It's surprising you don't remember everything about your P.E. class. How could you forget? Anyway, to refresh your memory, if you were a freshman or sophmore your class started in the smelly locker room. You had to dress out in your P.E. uniform evryday. No uniform meant public humiliation from your P.E. teacher. Once out in the gym you were forced to participate in some game you either knew or didn't know how to play. Somedays you would be taken outside to do some strenous activity like running laps around the football field while the teacher yelled at you for no reason. Also there were the days of learning social dancing while listening to really awful music. Then you would go back to the locker room just minutes before the bell rang.

A few juniors and seniors who were unfazed by all of this continued on to Advanced P.E. and weight training. This class was easier for them because they knew athletics were in their future. Mike White, 11

Justin Lucas

"Fast as fast can be, you can't catch me!!!", says a student running past a yearbook photographer. Running skill was essential in most P.E. events and sports. Also running skill was necessary to run out of the lunch area when the guard wasn't looking, and running to catch buses.

"I can run my with my hands behind my back!!!", says a student who is obviously impressed with his abilities. Basketball uniforms were acceptable as uniforms for some students in P.E. However students who wore street clothes usually had credit taken off. Dressing out was a way of learning reponsibility.

Although tennis shoes were geberally required as part of P.E. dress, some students tried to take their fashion statements with them into the gym. As this photo shows, some pupils liked to wear boots in P.E. class. They may have been preparing for one of those days when they had to walk through the mud.

The class avidly takes notes as biology teacher Mr. Givens lectures. Most students realize that taking notes is an important study habit to keep if they want to make good grades. Other students prefer to look like they are taking notes so they won't be called on by the teacher.

AP Chemistry student, senior Richard Johnson shows off his chemistry apparel, specially designed for women by men to protect his eyes and body from potentially dangerous chemicals and to keep his dress clean. AP Chemistry allows students to receive a much more in depth understanding of chemistry than just a regular chemistry class would.

Science

...makes the world go round

Biology, Chemistry, and Physics were only a few of the science courses that Mt. Vernon has to offer. Most freshmen started with Earth Science and went on from there to take Biology and Chemistry. Many students were interested in the less traditional courses such as Oceanography and Astronomy which were really benificial to potential marine biologists and astronauts, but interesting enough for anyone. Intesrestsed students could continue their science education by taking Physics, AP Biology, or AP Chemistry.

Mt. Vernon's Science department was fairly active with both a chemistry club and biology club. Like every year, the science department sponsored a science fair in which any student could enter and compete either individually or as a member of a team. From the school science fair, students were selected to represent their projects and the school at a regional science fair which was held in the spring.Yearbook Copywriter

Senior Dan Dubiel does independent classwork in Senior Science Investigations. Senior Science Investigations was a class that made every AP science student smile. Dan enjoyed this class because microscopes are like a doorway to a miniature dimension where ameobeas dance, chloroplasts shout in joy, and AP Biology students are revered by all microorganisms.

Senior Greg Carmilcheal pauses to pose for a studious portrait. He anticipates the forthcoming years at major unversities. Seniors at Mt. Vernon found that preparing for college took a lot of hard work and sobriety. This fine example of a student, especially known for his sobriety, was an inspiration to the underclassmen.

AP Biology students spent a lot of time using microscopes in the classroom. Students took AP Biology to help them prepare for careers in medicine or biology.

Social Studies

Those who fail are destined to repeat it.

Social Studies was one of those classes that you either loved or hated. This year at Mt. Vernon all students had to start thier journey throughthuis area of study withWorld Studies, a two year course. Then students move on to U.S./VA History. Following that students took regular or AP U.S./VA Government.

Some students found the AP couses to be absolutley painful, taking up much of their time. Other students enjoyed them. "You learn a lot in AP Government. I liked the model Congress sessions the best.", said senior Dennis Morris. The model Congress was a mock congress session held in winter.

Another side of social studies was Psycholgy, taught by Mr. Derek Steele. In this class students had to participate in the controversial activity known as flour babies. The studnts had to carry around a sack of flour for three weeks to learn about the responsibilities of infant care. Mike White, 11

Most Mt. Vernon students recognized the importance of studying their history. Others students disagreed. "Let us not look back," said graduate Hester Prynne, "The past is gone!"

Senior Doug Locke tries out the new computers in Mr. Adamusko's drawing class. New technology was constantly arriving in the Vocational Department. Technology was key to learning all the skills taught in these classes. Knowing how to use all types of technology gave students the competitive edge in the job market.

Cosmotology students were always busy styling thier own hair if not someone elses. The cosmetology department also served as a full service salon. People from all over the community came to to get haircuts and perms here. They had many devoted customers who came back many times.

Vocations
Students get a taste of the real world

Most Mt. Vernon Students take at least one vocational class while they are in high school. Technical Drawing, Auto Mechanics, and Photography are all vocational classes. Vocational classes teach skills that are directly related to some job. In photography, students learn the basic skills and are assisted in developing skills and techniques. There are various levels of Technical Drawing in which students learn types of drawing that are used in engineering and architecture. Sophmore Luisel Santi says, "If you want to be an engineer you've got to take this class." Cosmetolgy classes offered students hands on experience in running a beauty salon. They had customers from around the community. They offered a wide variety of beauty services. Auto shop classes also raised money by fixing people's cars. This kind of hands on learning was designed to get them a better chance in the job market. Margaret Fadden, 11.

Jonathan Kimball

Junior Amir Khan works on a car for Auto Shop class. His everyday learning was constantly enhanced by practice with real cars. Few other classes offfered this type of hands on experience. Working with new skills gave students a feeling of fufillment. Auto Shop also gave students skills that they could use at home.

In Engineering Drawing class Chris Phelps works on his masterpiece, a cutawy car sketch. This sketch showed both the inside and outside of the car simaltameously. These types of drawings are not meant to be art but are meant to explain how something works or is built. Technical Drawing is a desirable skill for a number of jobs.

Jonathan Kimball

Senior Jeremiah Stokes looks over the surface of his model car. Making these models was a mojor project in Engineering Drawing class. Students were given basic specifications but were given total creative freedom over thier designs. After being drawn, built, and painted, the cars were given gas power and raced.

PEOPLE

Weathering the diversity of the students daunted newcomers. Among such differences as race, religion, gender, wealth, personal hygiene choices, and family circumstances, students chose friends exactly like themselves or from another planet.

For freshmen, finding their own niche in the sundry network of teachers and students was easy to some and formidable to others. Sophomores and juniors found themselves continuously contracting new ideas and friends. Seniors looked past their 'juvenile days' toward the future and rendered experiments on underclassmen that reflected their mushrooming interests in the outside world.

Any who ventured to comprehend the full magnitude of the students and teachers of Mount Vernon were astounded by their kaleidoscopic image.jen saks, 10

Work & Fun

Busy, Busy, Busy. These three words best describe this year's Senior Class Officers. On top of filling out college applications, scholarships, working and maintaining grades, senior class officers organized three dances and defended their Homecoming crown. "I have never been so busy before", said Vice-President Temperance Walker. "It is very difficult to handle school work, my job, applications, and officer responsibilities. I had no idea that senior year would be so busy, but I'm so excited about graduation that it's worth all the hard work and effort."

President Jasmine Reynolds agrees. "Being the Senior Class President has been a great experience for me. No task has been to hard and none to easy. If I were offered a million dollars for the office, I wouldn't give it up." Sean Jensen — 12

"I spent all day preparing, but the moment I put on the paper drapes, I felt I needed to do my face and hair over again," said Eva Galeas. "Senior portraits are something eveyone sees, and I wanted to look perfect."

One of the first things juniors had to do before they felt like a senior was get their senior portrait. Copies were distributed to friends with little messages on the back, to family, and appeared in the yearbook.

Far from being approached with dread, as seniors approached senior dues, seniors enjoyed the chance to dress up and smile. "It's not like the pictures for underclassmen," said Matt Brubacher. "These pictures were more important. It's a good thing the photographer took several shots, and we got to pick the best one, because I couldn't stand having a bad senior portrait."jen saks, 10

Practicing with her flag, Angie Bowers manipulates it with military pecision. The marching band continued its winning streak of medals and awards through long hours of practice.

After four years of trying their hardest to make it to the top, seniors sometimes found their last year to be the most rewarding.

Even with the pressures of daily senior life, some seniors managed to stay on the top. Tori Cole, one such senior, said, "I've been a madrigal singer for several years and a musical careographer." Cole also maintained good grades in the hardest courses Mount Vernon had to offer. Laslie Luchrity, another senoir who excelled despite hard classes, said "I spent most of my free time in gymnastics and at dance competitions."

Other seniors, given priority above other students, took club offices. Their experiences were useful in making the clubs run properly. Stachea Bridges, Latin Club president, organized her club's participation in a Latin Convention, field trips, and fundraisers.

The spirit of the senior class was embodied by a banner outside their subschool reading "You finally made it! Good luck seniors!" Megan Graeber knowing where to go, Wesly Peterson just ows Taj Smith. Being part of Major News was demanding.

Thinking intently before speaking, Temperance Walker prepares to answer a question. Walker served as the senior class President.

Amid all the pressures the senior year entails, the underlying determinant is the college one decides to attend.

"It's been so tough," said Greg Carmichael, "sometimes it feels like I'm up forever. But it's about sacrifice; I have to give up a bit of my social life and priorities, the things that are most important to me."

To come to this ever-so-important conclusion, seniors sent postcards, visited campuses, attended the college fair, observed presentations at the career center, and flipped through an abundance of college viewbooks and other padded college advertisements. "It all begins to look the same after a while and you have to make distinctions," said SGA Vice President Pat Hickey.

While the vast majority of students procrastinate, others tackle the responsibility far in advance. Alan Johnson is compiling all the elements necessary for his application. "It was tough because it was extra work in addition to homework and band," said Johnson. "I figured, however, that I would eventually have to finish them."

DATING

Dating is an important part of high school life. For seniors, dating can mean the start of an intimate relationship or simply a time for experimenting with different types of people.

Some seniors even thought about marriage. The senior year was a time to take into consideration the responsibility of dating and its seriousness.

For other seniors, marriage was not an option, due to the fact that they chose to date students younger than themselves.

Teon Taylor had this to say, "I love my girlfriend very much, but since she is a freshman, I would not want to put her in a situation that could ruin her family relationship."

For all the ups and downs, dating was still a major part of the student life.

PETS

How would you feel about having a monkey for a pet? Or how about a talkative parrot? Well, some seniors felt that exotic pets would be better than normal pets because it would make them stand out from the crowd.

"Having a strange pet would be great because you could show it off to your friends. I would rather have a smaller, exotic animal, like an iguana, rather than a larger animal, like a parrot, because they would make less of a mess and would be less threatening," said Teon Taylor.

Some seniors would like really exotic pets. Brien Langsdorf was one of them, "I, personally, would like a platypus. I think exotic pets are great."

CLASS OFFICERS

Makin' it happen!

Dedication and hard work: Two ways to describe the Junior Class Officers. All year they worked hard to raise money for special events such as prom and class activities. Even though they labored long hours, some students felt cheated by the lack of guidance and direction. "You don't even want to know what I think of my class officers," said Mike Mkar.

From the Senior point of view, the class officers weren't working to the best of their abilities. "They didn't even raise enough money for prom; our prom!" said Tori Cole.

Never-the-less, the Junior class officers do deserve the credit of at least making an effort at doing something that resembled responsibility.

MONEY MAKING

The art of fundraising

Becoming a junior brings with it the many joys of being in the upperclass. However, it also brings some big responsibilities. The junior class is responsible for planning Homecoming and Prom. Along with this, juniors have to come up with all the funding for these events. As the class of 1995 found out, it's not as easy as it looks.

In late September the junior class treasury contained approximatly twenty-five dollars. Raising all the money required for Homecoming and Prom seemed like quite a daunting task. However, the class leadership took an aggressive attitude to the problem. The first major fundraiser of the year was the sale of Trolls and other products made by the Russ Corporation. Incentives, such as prom tickets, were offered to those who could sell the most items. This event raised five hundred dollars. The first car wash of the year made one hundred eighteen dollars. However, both fundraisers fell short of projected goals.

Other fundraisers were proposed for later in the year. These included a candy sale, a dance, and another car wash. "We need the juniors to pull together as a team and to show their class spirit to insure that we reach our fundraiser goals", said class sponsor Ms. Regina Williams.

EXCHANGE STUDENTS

Coming To America!

Exchange students from other countries gave students a chance to view people with different out looks. This year, Mount Vernon hosted three exchange students. For Mellie Jenson, a junior, the experience was definitly a positive one, "It makes you more independent and confident to have a year away from your parents" she said. But not all of this is helpfull. All foreign exchange students said that they missed their friends and families. Marta Balkova said, "I think American education is not as good as in my country". Marten Kihlstrom, too, has alreaby learned most of what he's been taught, but he says, "I came here to learn about the language and culture, not to study."

All three students noticed major cultural differences. "The way people think is different. I don't know. They're crazy." Marta described. Whatever the case, students from abroad and here learned alot about the world.

Sitting in algebra 2 class, Melly Mueller-Jensen works diligently. Mueller-Jensen came all the way from Germany to go to school in America. Exchange students offered Americans the chance to get to know another culture.

Looking angry, Mike Jones plays his awesome riffs. Maybe it was part of the act, maybe not. Anyhow, Jones prided himself on belonging to several bands.

Chillin' at lunch, Billy Strueder hangs out with some friends. Lunchtime was an excellent time for being with friends.

BIG + FURRY PETS

Now That's A Lot Of Work!

Enslaving large, helpless creatures has almost become a past-time for our society. Many of these unfortunate heaps of flesh and fur were born into this lifestyle of captivity. There has yet to be an uprising from them, though, so we may assume that they are all content in this state of being. "Big furry pets taste good on whole wheat." claimed Junior Iris Chadab. Good indeed.

These tiny creatures were often sources of mockery and laughter, but at times, when students found themselves without friends, they did serve as temporary resevoirs of companionships. "I had a dog. It bit me. I killed it." said Freshman Chris Finnigan. (Yes, he did say that, We, however, make no claims as to it's value in truth.)

Some people, however, placed their trust in their menacing-looking, compassionate creatures. "Big furry pets are better than small because they offer more protection." believed Junior Elaine Populakes. Protection indeed.

None-the-less, there are few in existence who can deny the imperial significance large furry animals have played in this world. "Sometimes we live no particular way but our own," — Grateful Dead.

This gorgeous, black dog belonged to Jenny Craten. She took extra special care of it and boasted of its beauty often.

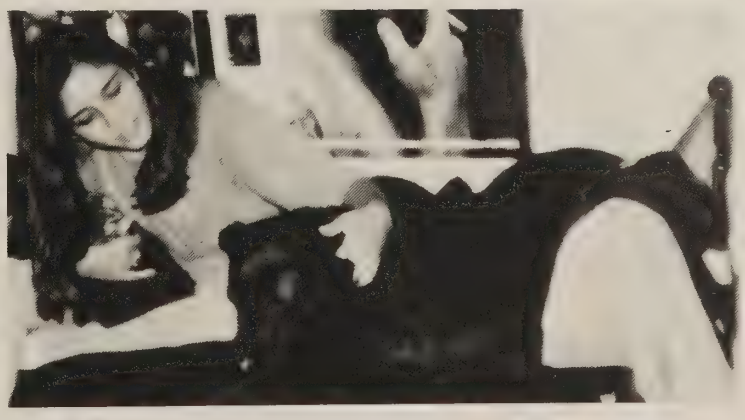
Looking mean for the camera, this cat waited for its owner to come feed it. Cats were reliable and very clean pets.

Preparing to play, this puppy called "Smokey" learned several things during his first few months. Smokey just happens to be the same dog as on the right.

Staring into the camera, "Belle'" begged for food. Belonging to Megan Graeber, this dog needed constant attention throughout the day.

Being lazy underneath Mrs. Cross' kitchen chair, this fat cat had nothing to complain about. Cats had the easiest life-styles anyone could ask for.

What a happy dog! Dogs made for long time pals and fun weekend friends. This dog belonged to Jen Woodfin, the sophomore that raised it from puppy-hood.



Having fun with her cat and dog, Elaine Papalakous thinks of all the times when they had fun together. Papawhatever also owned a grey cockatiel named Spike.

Playing sax in jazz band, Darnley Hodge chills. Jazz band was often exciting as they came up with def jams.

CLASS OFFICERS

This year's sophomore class officers demonstrated their skills by doing officer like things, or in short, things that a sophomore class officer would do. Being a class officer required extreme patience, especially when at a pointless afterschool meeting, such as student congress, or detention. "A lot of boring stuff happens, strangely enough, most of it happens around me. But it looks good on a college transcript," said Kelly Hall allegedly.

"I encourage everyone to run," said senator Chris Brophy, "It's really impressive to fellow students who." Students indeed. But class officer isn't all zen and games, "It requires determination, patience, and such skills as extortion, blackmail, and the ability to accept the fact you have no power," said a mocking student Diaper Southworth.

LAST YEAR OF PE

Physical fitness anyone?!

Sophomore year, the year of Driver's Education, the last year of being an underclassman, and the last year of required PE. When asked their opinion on the topic of their last year of PE, sophomores gave a wide variety of responses.

On his way back from football practice, Mike Gilchrist said "I Just got sacked by three people so I don't know...". Holly Urquehart thought "It's kind of bad to lose it because it's the only form of in-school excercise that we can get each day," while Erin Watts said "I seriously think we don't need PE". Many students were glad that they wouldn't have to worry about getting in uniform, while others would miss the one class where they are able to run and play while socializing with friends and not having to worry about homework.

Mary Doran quoted "Wow, that makes me really happy," and Keala Murdock and Tobi Dennick simply said "Thank God". Finally, the most liberated answer goes to Bryan Godfrey with "The academics break your mind; PE breaks your body".

Sophomore Holly Urquhart enjoys her last year of P.E. by participating in an unusual form of tennis.

LEARNER'S PERMIT
Driving Us Crazy!

Open the door. Sit down. Adjust the seat. Fasten the seatbelt. Adjust the rear view mirror. Adjust the side view mirror. Place the key in the ignition. Turn the key. Such simple concepts were taught to sophomores in drivers' education.

Drivers' education began second quarter during PE classes for sophomores with earlier birthdays. PE teachers Mr. Kenny Farmer and Mr. Brian Taylor taught the class. Curriculum included slide shows, movies, and a talk with a race car driver. "The drivers' ed films are educational but gorey," said Jill Metcalf.

After eight weeks of class came the most exciting part for sophomores- getting their learners' permit and starting to drive. Years of illegal practice made procuring their permanent licences even easier.

For band members such as Mark Southworth, it was important to be able to have transportation just a phone call away. Band members often stayed late and endured gruelling hours of practice everyday.

STRANGE PETS
What's That?

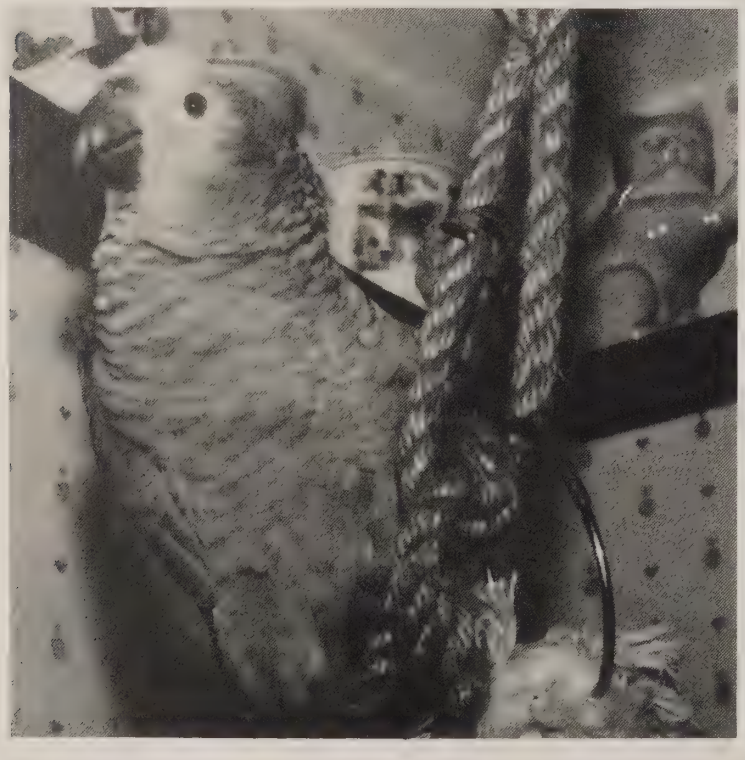
Rabbits, cats, iguanas and even pigs made up the variety of pets found amongst sophomore students. Many students found their pets to be good sources of companionship. "I like my bunny because he follows me around and bites at my ankles," said Jill Metcalf.

Some students pets were quite unique in their own way. Matt Adamson had a cat weighing 22 pounds, and Frankie Lamberth's dog was toothless. "My cat weighs 3 pounds, sleeps 23 hours a day, flips around for the last hour and has flashbacks," said Oliver Sharpe.

Although cute, some pets proved to be troublesome at times. "My pig figured out how to open cupboards. I came home once, and she had gotten into everything. She was so cute, sitting there eating a huge pile of dried oats," said Bryan Godfrey. "Whenever my friends come over, my dog loses control of her bladder," said Mike Kilday.

Despite how common some of the sophomore's pets may have seemed, many of them were anything but common. Grant Graeber, 10)

A certain sophomore, who shall remain anonymous, owned this rather unusual pig. Pigs make rare, yet fun, pets.

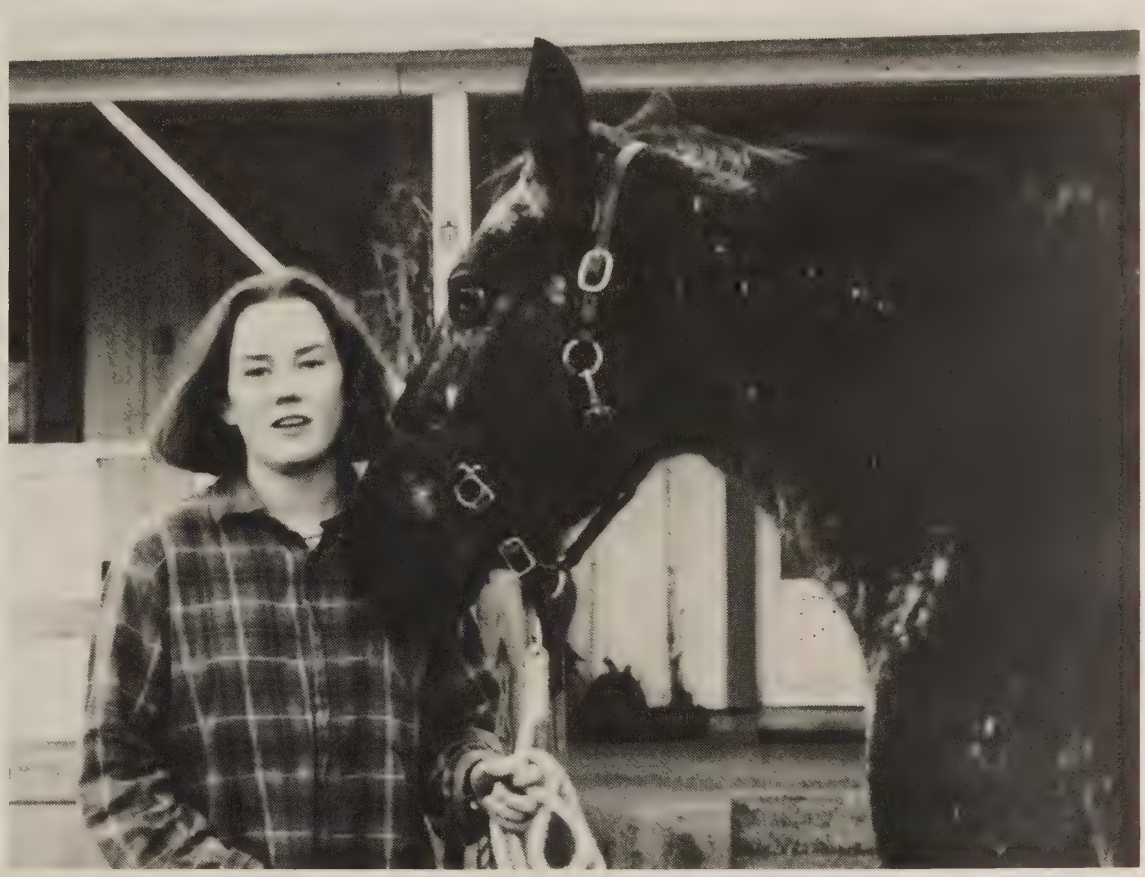


Some sophomores enjoyed feathered company on the weekends. Parrots made for long lasting pets because they live for up to 85 years.

Cockatiels kept many sophomores company because of their cheerful whistles. Albino cockatiels were even more colorful than greys.

Holding her bunny, Jill Metcalf giggles uncontrollably. Bunnies were great for soft, dependable pets.

Preparing for a quiet ride with her favorite horse, Mary Doran comforts the horse. Riding provided quality time with larger animals.



This little grey cockatiel provided entertainment with songs like "Bridge on the River Kwai", and "Pop goes the Weasel" for Grant Graeber on the weekends.

Having fun with her killer dog, (just kidding), Tobi Denick gets a wet face. Dogs were the favorite pets among sophomores because of their dependability.

It's Politics Again

Freshmen Elect Leaders

As Leticia Manning and Charisse Cecil walk down the hall, they talk about new ideas for SGA. Leticia, freshmen class president, found working with her peers was a big part of being a class officer.

When the class of '97 entered the Mt. Vernon school system, many students looked for a way to move up among the the ranks. Some joined clubs or activties, but for freshmen, offices remained elusive, reserved for upperclassmen or those more expierenced than themselves. However, some offices were reserved entirely fo freshman- the freshman class offices. To a select few, an opportunity to rise in the ranks presented itself during freshman class elections. Being an officer meant resposibility and organization to some who ran, while for others it just meant being with friends, getting out of class , knowing what was going on, and having fun.

Most of the officers elected wanted to have influence in their new school. "I ran because I wanted to make a difference and I was determined to make the freshmen class good," said freshman class president Leticia Manning. "All this may seem like loads of work, but for me, the fun of working together made it all worth while."

The first major event facing the newly-elected class officers was Spirit Week before Homecoming. Picking the theme "Lip Service", they organized subschool decorations and a skit for the pep rally. Tiffany Lynch remarked, "Decorating the subschool with all my friends was great! I didn't even notice how late we stayed at school." Chris Kimball said, "I was astounded at the incredible acting skill in my fellow classmates. The freshmen class officers orchastrated a wonderful performance."Autumn Girouard, 10

Posing for a picture, freshmen class senator Ann Harris and Carl Navia say "cheese", and smile for the camera. Friendliness was a big part of being elected a class officer.

In line, Holly Jourdan, Katie Smith, and Jessica Hingle wait for their turn at the long jump. Freshman officers, as well as all other students, found that they had to divide their time between school and extra-curricular activities.

ADJUSTMENT
Where Do We Go?

As Justin Lorentzen decided what to do next, he gets advice from friends. Lorentzen worked on the homecoming skit during the fall.

After being the big fish in a little pond in the eighth grade, the tides have turned once again. As the entering freshmen class, they were now the tiniest fish in a much bigger pond.

For many students, the adjustment was not a difficuult one. "In intermediate school, I knew lots of people in highschool so it wasn't a very difficult transition," said Tennisha Walker. "It's been a whole different atmosphere and experience."

Walker added the many benefits of highschool wich included the number of available males and the quality of teaching.

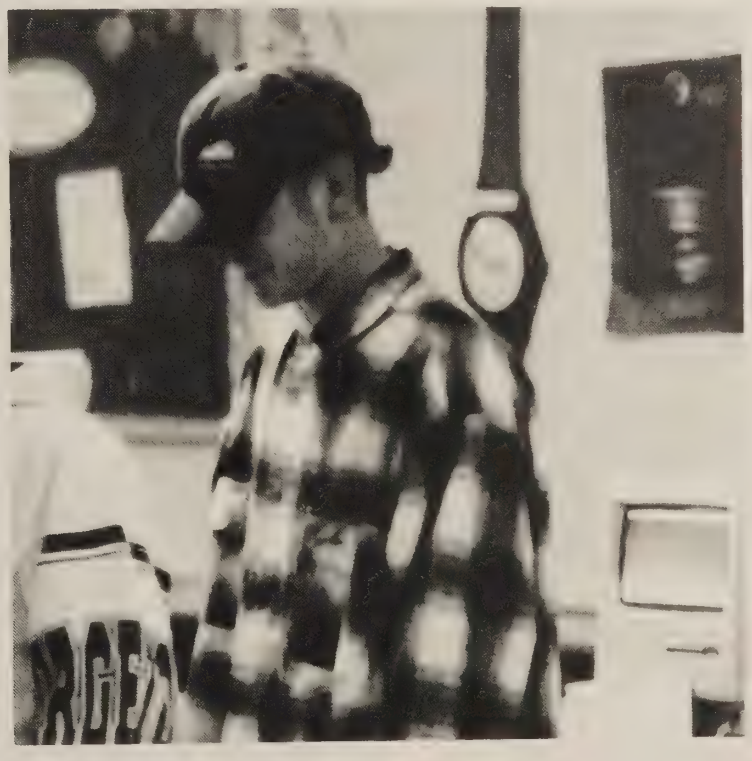
Others, however, had some difficulty making the transition. Misty McGuire said the responsibalities were somewhat overwhelming.

"It was kind of tough at first but ten things started to get easier," said Chris Finnigan.

Ann Haarris said, "Highschool is a lot harder with the class load. I never had homework last year."

The freshmen will soon get into the flow of highschool and gradually mature. They will regain control of the school. After graduation, their power will diminish as they continue this life cycle.

Waiting for the bus early in the morning at the Latin convention, Kathleen Fadden talks with friends. Getting up early was part of everyday life for all students.



Standing with friends in the computer lab, Jon Reed enjoys the company. Being able to work in the computer lab was great for freshmen.

FRESHMEN

There's lots of 'em

Packing her books for the long trip home, Sarah Hoff sighs with relief as the school day ends. Being part of the large freshmen class meant having lots of friends in her own grade level.

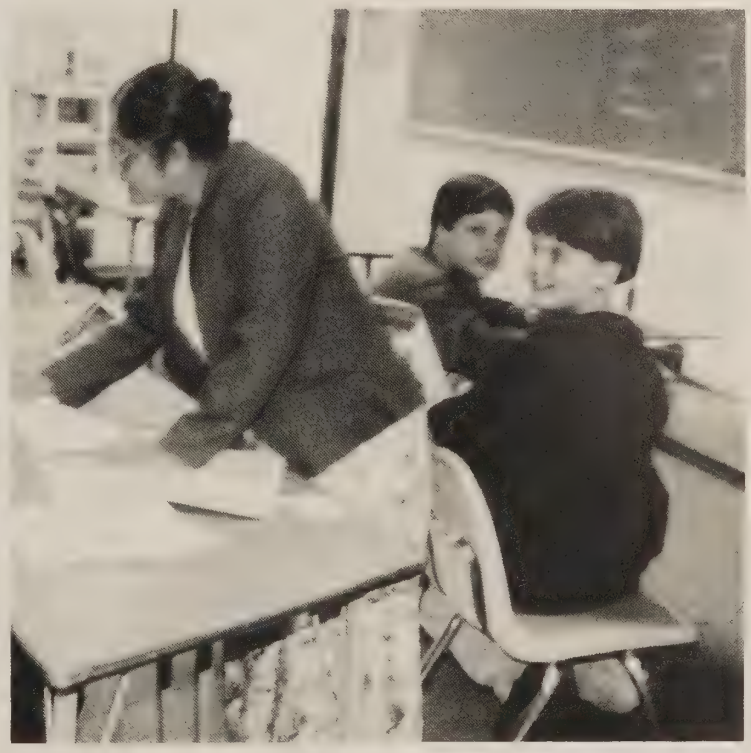
The halls became a little more crowded this year as the class of '97 joined the ranks of Mount Vernon. With 450+ students in the freshman class, large was found to be an understatement in describing the class size. "The freshmen class is very large, but the school is so big that we still feel very small," said Chris Finnigan.

The plethora of students often made for a crowded locker bank. Lisa Suberoc said, "Sometimes I feel like I have to fight my way to my locker. It's annoying at first, but you eventually get used to it."

Many students agreed that the locker bank was overcrowded. "I've had an easier time getting through people at football practice than in the locker bank. I've even been late to class before because of how long it takes to get to my locker."

Even with their enormous size, one thing remained true about the freshman: as Justin Lang put it, "Even though there are more freshman than any of the other classes, we are still the underclassman." Grant Graeber, 10

As usual, the freshmen class wasn't as active at the pep rallies as the other classes. Nevertheless, the freshmen class was larger than any other class, with over 400 students.



Listening to his teacher explain work to another student, Paul Wolfe waits his turn. Having so many students arrive in the school at once meant overcrowded classes.

Thinking about who he will ask to dance next, Edward Gilmore sits with his friends. Dancing was an activity everybody could enjoy.

TINY PETS

Where did they go?

Along with tiny freshmen came tiny pets. Many freshmen liked to have small pets so that they could take care of them with ease. Some of the many tiny pets that could be found within the homes of freshmen included rats, birds, hamsters, lizards, and bunnies.

"I like tiny pets," said senior Eric Breshnahan.

"I like fish and Siberian hamsters. I don't like small dogs!" said Mr. Gerard.

Some people prefer tiny pets because they are more loveable and cuddly than large burly animals. "They are easy to cuddle with," said junior Raquel Duarte-Ponce. Senior Mike Robinette enjoyed spending time with his ferret, "I love playing with them, because they're funny when they run. They love to steal expensive stuff, though."

They're cute, they're cuddly, they're expensive, but we love them.

Looking rather scraggly, this little hamster wakes up after a long nap. Hamsters didn't live long and were subject to tumors during their short life.

Respect

Or "Gosh, We Love You."

Gone are the days when teachers had authority to reprimand students as they pleased. Today, with the shift of powers, the respect of teachers appears to be diminishing for a number of teachers.

"Most of them are buttheads," said junior Huong Ly. "They expect us to respect them, but they don't respect us. They're so hypocritical."

Senior Tracy Harmon, on the other hand, felt that students were disrespectful of teachers and utilized them as resources. "We show no respect towards our teachers. It's kind of rude," said Harmon. "They're there for us and we should take advantage of them."

According to senior Greg Charmichael, the students who strived to learn, appreciated their teachers. "For instance," he said, 'Ms. Wagner somehow made math fun." He added that, "some students want to learn but get discouraged. All they need is a little encouragement."

In the wise words of Homecoming Queen Brandi Carter, "It works both ways. To earn respect you must give respect." Sean Jensen, 12

Teachers Have Different Approaches

Many teachers qualified as having strange or unusual teaching techniques. They went to great lengths to help their students and make sure they enjoyed learning. When asked which teacher she thought had strange techniques, junior Stephanie Thompson replied, "Ms. Patricia Efthemes, the fashion teacher. She is like a big sister, only one that you can get along with".

Another teacher that students thought had unusual techniques was Mr. Robert Ingalls, who taught English. "He has bean bags and pillows, you don't even have to be one of your students, he will let you come in and lay down is his room anyway", said sophomore Beth Buckly.

Mrs. Joyce Jones, the creative writing and tenth grade english teacher, had many people talking about her strange techniques. When asked what he thought of Mrs. Jones, senior Fred Pessuro said, "She calls kids by pet names and when you're in her class the students learn from each other".

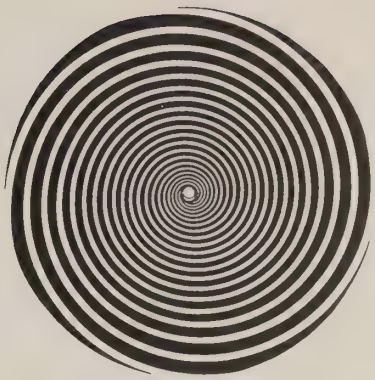
SPORTS



Running, jumping, kicking, swimming, diving, striking, swinging, catching, throwing, cheering, whacking, flipping, wrestling, scoring, and winning briefly describe all Mount Vernon organised sports, if one played them all at once.

Students who wanted to play sports had a wide varity to choose from. Those who didn't want to play but enjoyed the excitment of games managed teams or came to games to support their friends and school in aggressive tournaments against rival schools.

To encourage students to support their sports teams, pep rallies were held in the afternoons during school. Those who attended sat segregated by class and shouted catchy slogans on command.

The wrestling team won the Gunston District Championship for the third year in a row and placed second in regionals.

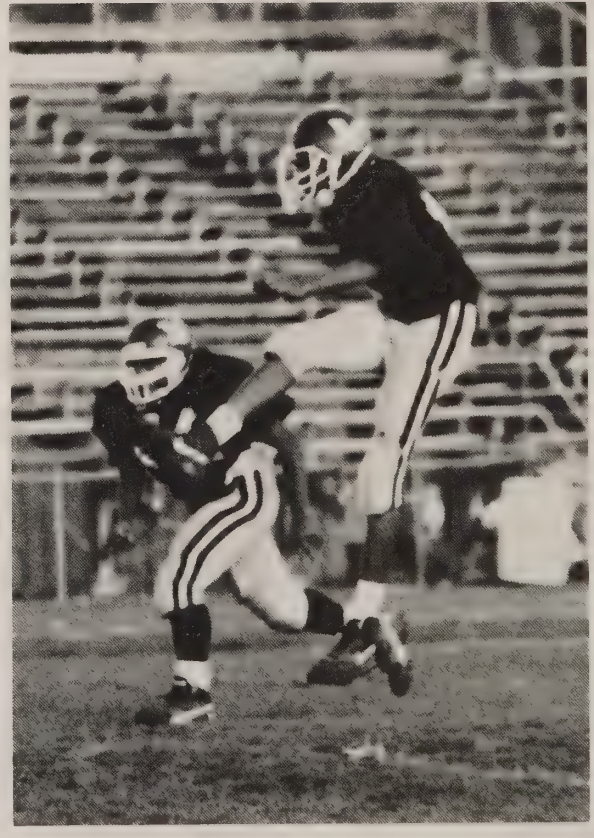
Athletes were relieved to know that in the following year they would be a member of a new district. "It's a real relief," said sophomore Liz Gerloff. "We'll be playing schools our size or smaller."

GUMPTION

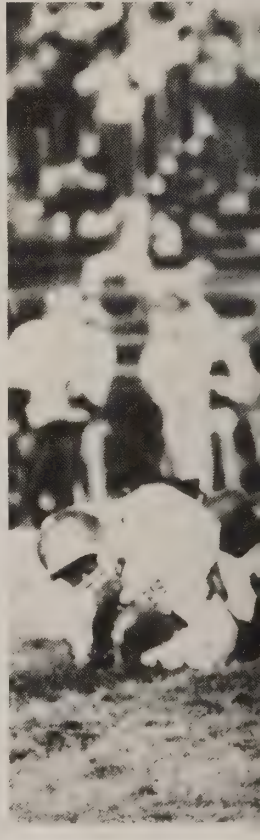
Senior Eric Mejia (5'7", 190 lbs.) and Junior Chang Yi (6'2", 240 lbs., [wow]) scramble to dismember an opponent who, through an ill fated twist of change has the ball.

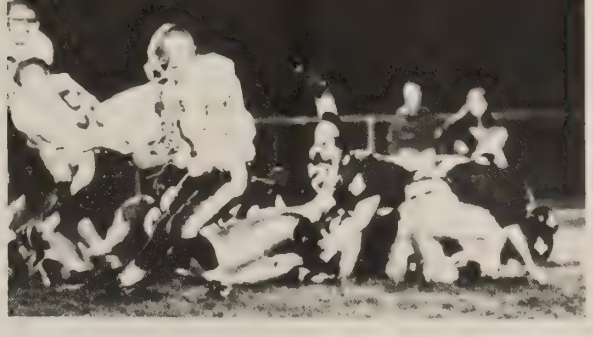
Desperately scanning the field, Senior Eric Mejia is quick to discover that the opposing team member (number 78) does not have the ball. Junior Brian Breshnahan joins him in this revelation.

Senior Dovon Townsend demonstrates his less glorious abilities, as he is sacked by an opponent during a scrimmage which does not reflect upon the team's standing.



Here we see an unknown place kicker in his natural habitat: practice. Practice was the fuel in the pile driving machine that is the Majors.





To the average layman, this may look like a mangled twisted knot of limbs. But to the keen mind of the avid football observer, it is actually an extensively planned defense strategy geared towards immobilizing the opposition by crushing the opponent with their bulk.

A FIELD

The fall season of 1993 was not the complete success that anyone willing to be quoted ever anticipated. "Even though we lost games, we had fun this season," Junior Becky Jeffreys. And in the long run, it doesn't matter how badly you fail, so long as you enjoy failing. The Coaches, Tracy "the cab" Berelli (whose hobbies include water sports and soccer), and Varsity Coach Glenda Meniel (the unmarried Child Care Advocate of the Year), both implied that this season would be pivotal in forging dreams of dominance manifest in reality. We wait, all ashiver. No one can say this season is totally without merit. Mandy Redfern did become the highest scorer for the Varsity team, and one lucky girl is every year. also, Junior Gina "I have a question" Miller got into the Varsity team in her first year playing. "The JV team has gained a great deal of experience for next year," said Sophomore Chelsea Ray. Indeed so, for most of the JV team was new faces, needing to be trained, expecting to ooze into the varsity team next year. Scores have been proven and proved once again as symbolic toe tags assigned to teams to rank nothing but a 2 dimensional number, not the spirit and teamwork this team possesses.

On the right, Sophomore Amy Park tries to nail the ball. Park learned to enjoy power over the ball during the course of the season.

THE LONG WALK

As Autumn sinks through the westgate, and winter bears it's head, a period of time between the two is born. That time is Cross Country. "We always run like six or eight miles in practice, so running three miles in a meet is easy," said savior Todd Williams. Apparently the cold does not effect these warriors, who so bravely run in the winter air.

"I like cross country. I like it a lot," sophomore Kevin Noble. He liked cross country. Liked it, indeed. The determination and commitment of this team is focused through the lens call Coach Rob "big red" Rieger.

Kevin "tiny bubbles" Noble takes a break from running and entertains his fellow cross countrymen. Noble enjoyed to dress up in all sorts of attire.

Stretching before running allows the runner to create a frame of reference for pain, so he can compare it to the agony of running.

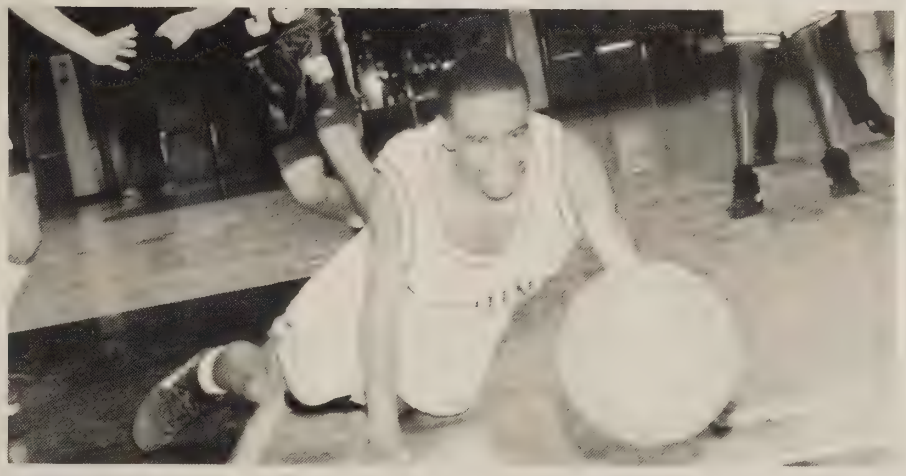
BLACKTOP

A nameless opponent puts his hands in the air. Putting hands in the air was not a very effective strategy against the piledriving force of DeVaugn Townsend.

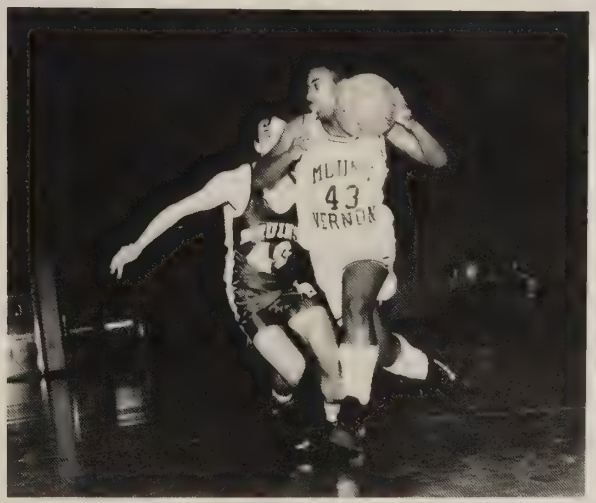
Chris Barker maneuvers around an opponent. Opponents proved vital in basketball, as one team basketball is called dull.

Pictured: a group of basketball players. Not pictured: everything else. What are they all touching, Coach Grogan? Right, Thomas Simmons Busts a phat move.

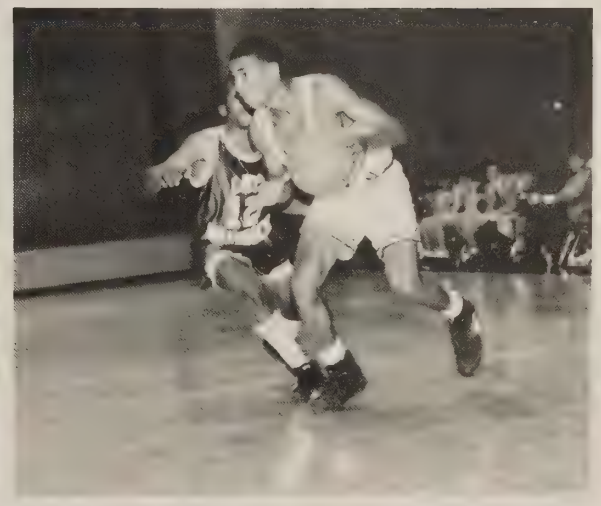
Pat Langley. Ball. You get the picture. Langley enjoyed basketball, as it was a great opportunity to do strange inexplicable things.



Alan Williams, scrambling for the ball. Unfortunately, the ball went out of bounds, but on the bright side, we got this swell picture of him.



Orlando Jones, dribbling up court, is number 43. Go Orlando.



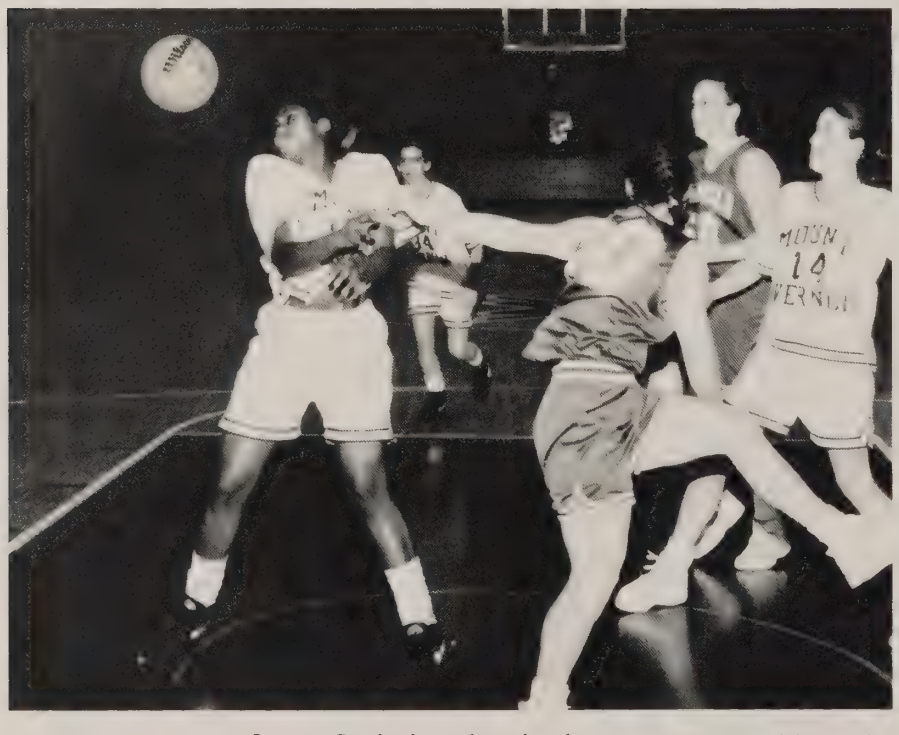
Sophomore Sean Floyd moves in to position. One of Floyd's favorite activities was basketball. So that's why he's playing it here.

BOUNCY BOUNCY

Ah, winter. We pack ourselves into the gymnasium, to get warm, and the price? To watch girls basketball. The team was made up of mostly young people, particularly females, but sexist caste systems aside, the team did fairly well, a great improvement on fairly bad. "Coach Farmer really drove us this year," said Kelly Barajas, "We did well with a very young team, so next year we'll be even better." We wait, all ashiver.

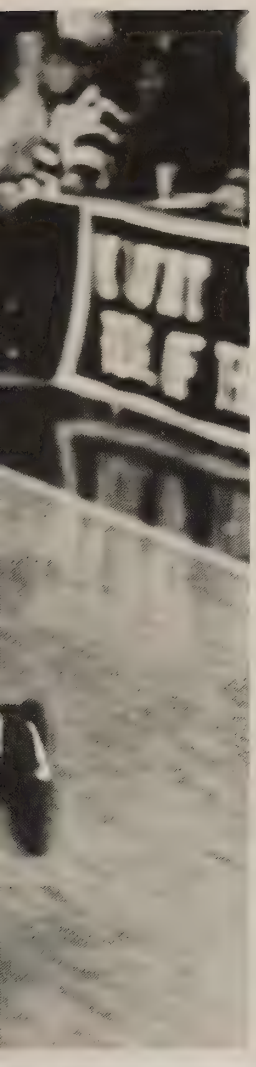
The female J/V and Varsity teams existed this year. This being so, hands, 20 strong, began pushing the delicate axis upon which the sport so precariously rests towards total domination and victory. Again, we wait, all ashiver. When asked, Pat Hickey replied, "You get to yell, spit, curse, get dirty, and scratch yourself — what more could a guy want?" What more indeed.

Nicole Brown going up for a basket. A basket is worth 2 points, you know.



Latonya Copeland gets slapped in the face, as the ball escapes the realm of reason and sense.

A clotted knot of flesh. This simple exercise in chaos is in fact a war strategy bent upon sending the enemy askew.



Jen Reily, deciding as to what to do with the ball. Apparently, deciding to hold it like a melon.

Angela Taylor taking on a swarming mass of opponent-like qualities manifest in several mindless slaves near her.

SWEATING

You're in the gymnasium, staring intently at the action unfolding before you on the court. Suddenly, out of the corner of your eye, a strange bouncing . . . thing captures your attention, and you lose track of the game. Who are these bouncing . . . things? The cheerleaders. Without cheerleaders, there would be very little cheering in the game. But it's not all fun and games, no. "Cheerleading is more than just jumping around. A good cheerleader leaves the basketball game just as tired as the players," said Erin Akins. Tired indeed.

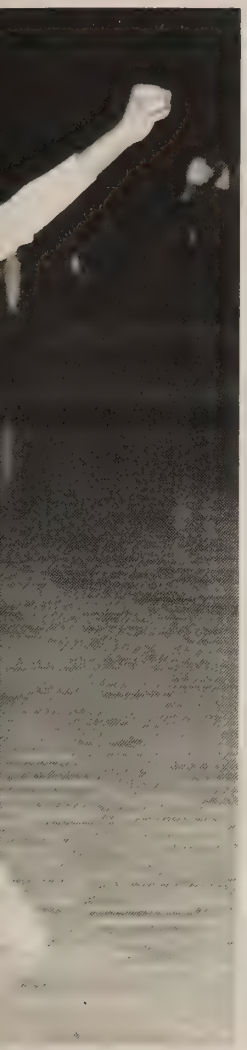
The varsity cheerleading team at attention before their massive spherical shrine. To some, the cheerleaders were more interesting than the basketball game.

Four Varsity cheerleaders perform their dramatic interpretation of ancient Egypt. Such athletic prowess got them the respect of their parents, teachers, and peers.



Sophomore Seema Sethi stands upon the two underlings who have been reduced to mere pedastles. Such service was expected from some of the cheerleaders.

Luciana Evans waiting to perform. Evan's preparedness was a shock to those who were unprepared.

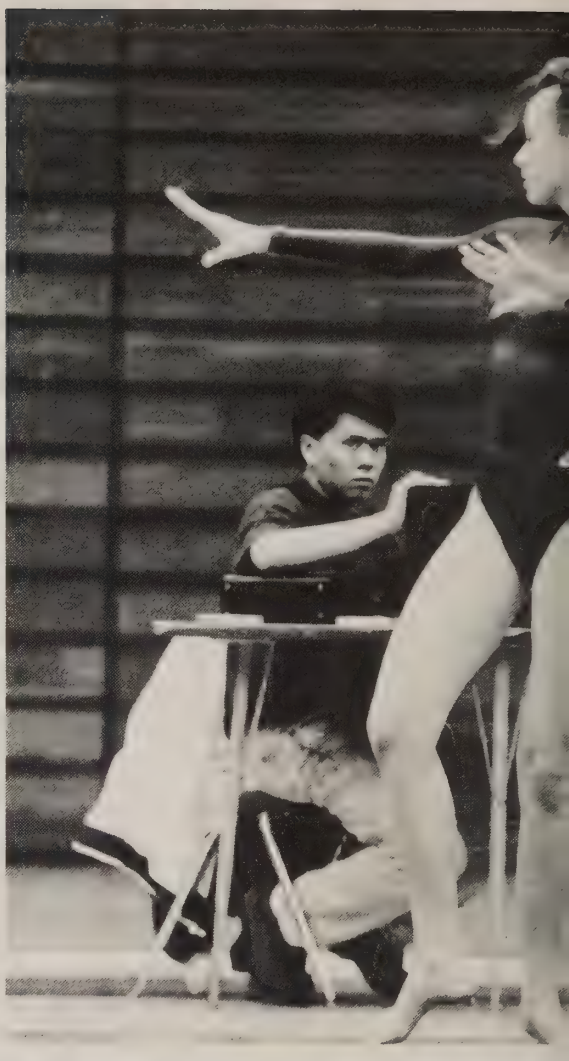
Once again, the Varsity cheerleaders performing a difficult and precise routine. Many were amazed at how difficult and precise the routines were.

Lindsay Papion takes center stage. Upstaging people was what cheerleading was all about.

LEARNING TO FLY

The girls gymnastics team from Mount Vernon this year was just as fun to watch as to be in. Junior Gina Miller was one of the top gymnasts in this seasons' team. "You have to be very versatile to compete well in gymnastics because there are four events in competition: balance beam, vault, floor, and uneven bars." The perfect combination of academics and gymnastics. Other outstanding players included Sophomore Ainslie Pearsall. "I really like gymnastics," said Junior Vicki Lawrence. Lawrence enjoyed gymnastics. Another outstanding athlete was Junior Cathy Marlatt. Marlatt was unavailable for quote, but we're sure she would have expressed her devotion and utmost respect for the sport as a whole.

The gymnastics team, blessed by the coaching abilities of Barbara Clark, did better than last year, perhaps because of the abundance of returning gymnastics from last year's season. Perhaps the athletes in their junior year will return next year to soar into mass wealth and good fortune.



Junior Vicki Lawrence prances nimbly about during her floor routine. Lawrence, like all the team, was a very versatile competitor to be able to go from jumping over things to manipulating bars, to walking on a beam.

Junior Gina Miller showing unerring grace and form in a shower of light. A truly glorious floor routine, indeed.

Junior Alissa Barret warms up on the floor. Walking with eyes closed allowed her to clear her mind of mortal concerns and woes.

Gymnasts required constant feedback on their performance. Constructive criticism allowed the athletes to improve, especially when this feedback comes from a fellow athlete, such as Linda Truong, pictured here.

Sophomore Ainslie Pearsall and friends stand to the edge of the floor, awaiting their moment of glory, when they go forth and reclaim accolades of valor and other cool stuff.

The gymnastics team; its time to rise to the challenges before them, the pressures of competition, and the national anthem. Nothing like the red, white, and blue to get the adrenaline ripping.

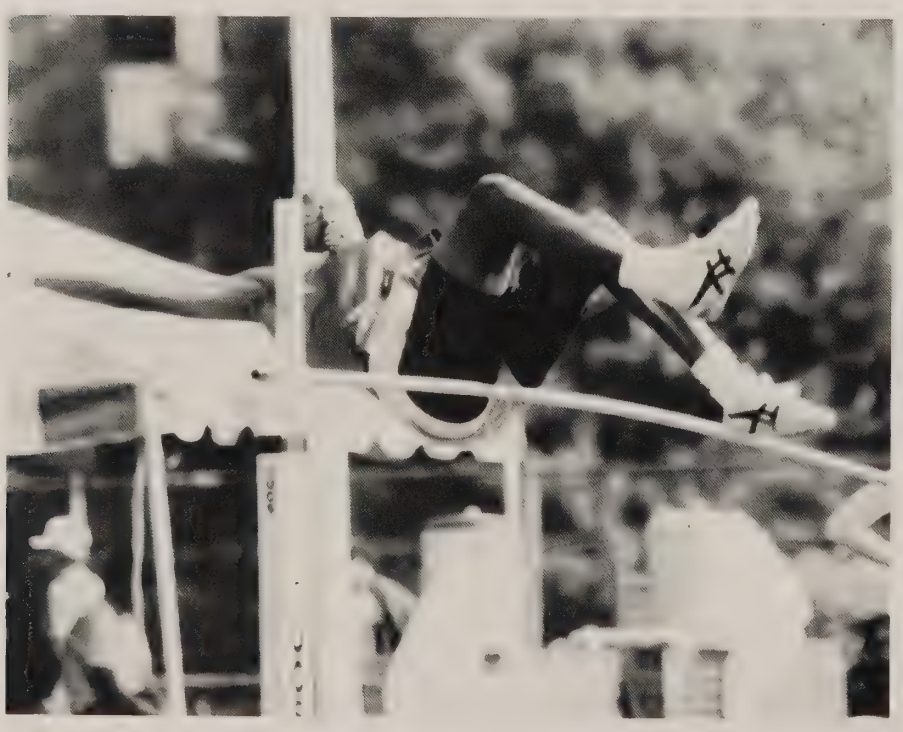
Coach Barbara Clark stands confronted by two bars before her, and the student entwined therein.

SPEED

"I had a great season this year. I took a lot of firsts, broke some records — but it's too bad track doesn't get the attention or recognition that it deserves, like most other sports get," said Senior Dawayne Wallace. Perhaps other sports such as football or basketball do get more recognition, but not here, no. This is the world of Spring track.

The track team did very well in running events and throwing events. Coach Steve Kent expressed his total satisfaction with this year's team. "With all the people on the team, I thought we had a really good chance at districts," said Steve Kent.

Felicia Cooksey jumps over a hurdle at a meet at T.C. Williams High School. Felicia left all her opponents in her dust.

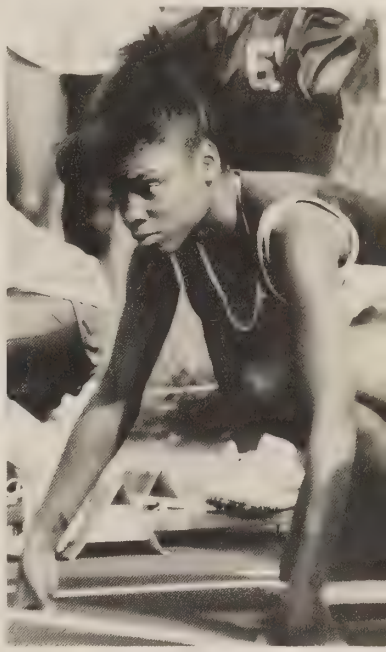


Andre Tanks appears to fly in the high jump. He sure did jump high.

Senior Chang Yi (6'2", 240 lbs. [wow]) grimaces in sever concentration upon throwing a metal ball. Yi's upper body strength got him good scores in events related to throwing inanimate objects.

Discus was probably the most difficult event, relying upon strength, coordination, and proper judgement.

Preparing for a race physically is not so difficult as preparing mentally. Oh, if we could hear what Crystal Hamlin is thinking to ready herself for the sprint on which she is about to embark.



Dovon Townsend jumps in the long jump. Dovon did very well in track this year.

Can you tell which of the Wilson brothers this is? "Wilson" enjoyed running. If he didn't, he probably would not be pictured doing so.

I SAID RUN!

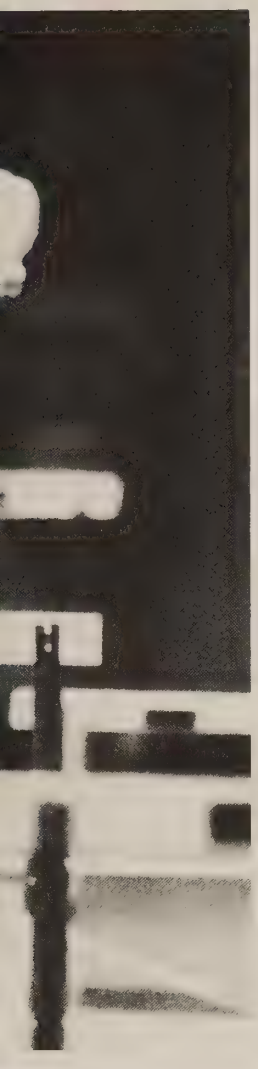
Indoor track, ah, the force that pulls us indoors from the callous bitter chill. Nothing like watching people run to warm you up, and share some school spirit. "Even though it was winter track, we practiced outdoors most of the time. That didn't make much sense," said Senior Luis Gomez. But apparently exposure to the harsh biting westwardly winds infused the team with a bitter edge, for they ran like a team possessed.

Hopefully, the next track team will be able to achieve a fraction of the glory that this team has ripped from their opponent's beating hearts.

Junior Dawayne Wallace takes the lead in the hurdles. All others were easily crushed beneath his all powerful boots of steel.

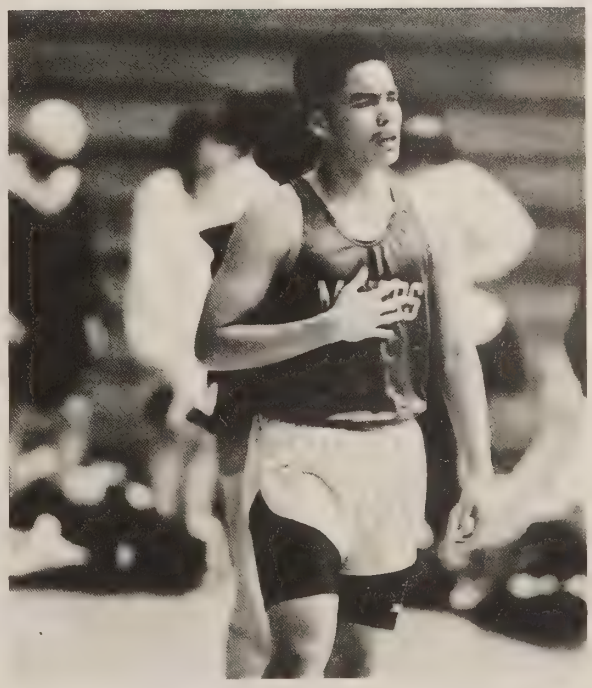
Senior Charalle Hawkins easily bursts ahead of the competition in the 100 meter sprint. Finally, a runner with pizazz.

The 4 man relay was a difficult event for most. It required for you to trust the man in front of you, and rely on the man behind you. Yay, track.



Luis Gomez rounds a curve, matching skill and wits against the foolish opponent. Luis continues to play against opponents.

Freshman Carrie Boyce runs away from a cone. She's running really fast, you know.



Freshman David Ratliff runs for glory! He runs for power! He runs for total dominance! This was his first year at Mount Vernon.

Pain was secondary to victory, for the indoor track team. Time would heal wounds, but power is almighty.

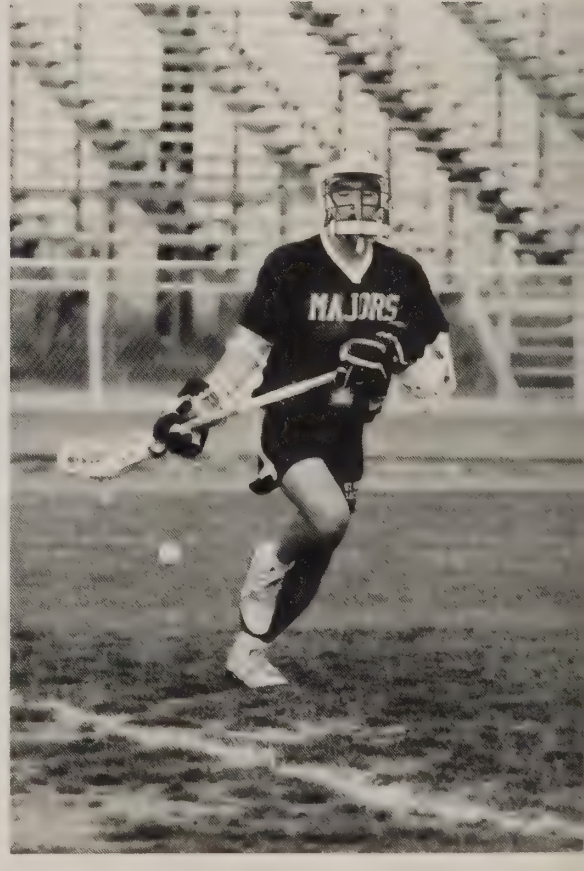
HARDCORE

Lacrosse started the season off on the 14th of February with aspirations of glory and mad tyrannical power. Coach Gerard felt that the players should start pre-season training before the season. Valentines day served as the axis for the rotation of the celestial body known as Varsity lacrosse.

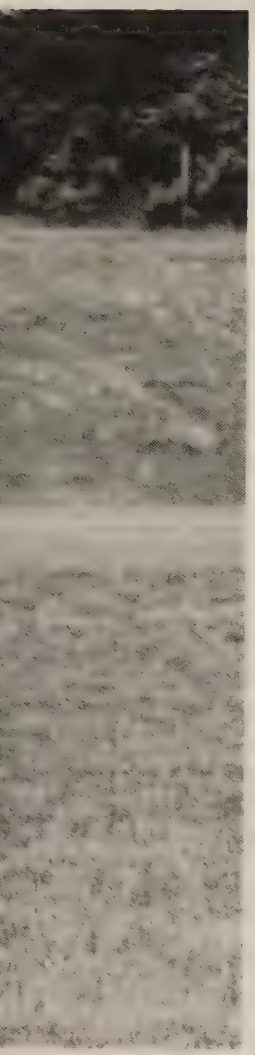
Despite the muddy fields and frequent snowstorms, the athletes were still expected to practice lacrosse. "Part of our success is due to our stability. We've had the same coach since the program started," said senior Jake Pensler. Players put hard work into practice, not to mention the occasional suicide runs. "The coaches run us really hard, but it pays off in the end," said senior John Ko. It is evident to anyone that sanity takes second to the hard work of the lacrosse players, whose determination and good intentions have paid off in full.

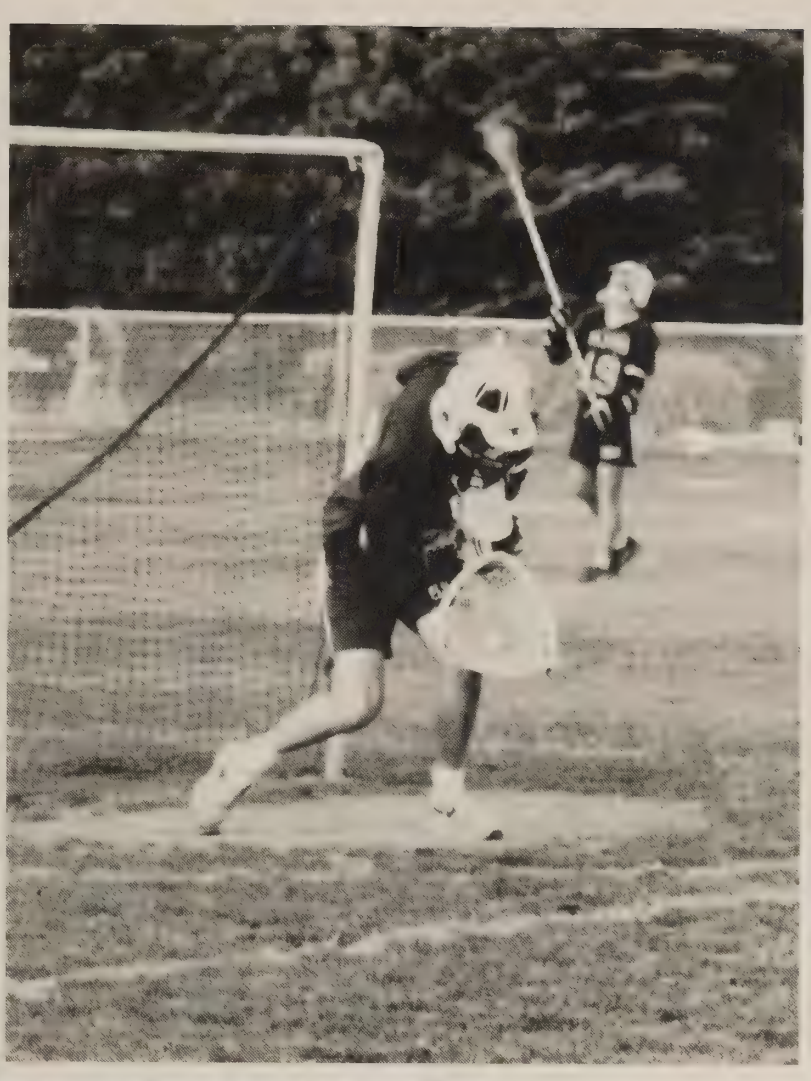
Junior Rich Hoben gives the opponent with the ball a few good whacks to the lower torso. Perhaps a few bruises will teach him the error of his inefficient American ways.

Sophomore Salvador Harvey runs around the field playing lacrosse. Fortunately, he happens upon the ball and the opposing team happens upon him.



Graduate Phoung Do demonstrates his less glorious abilities. One of the more intricate, lesser nuances of Lacrosse was ball handling.





The goalie Jody Peoples served a complex purpose in boys lacrosse. He performed such functions as blocking the ball, preventing scoring, and intimidating the other team as a whole.

Graduate Mary Harbour sits on a bench on the Mount Vernon Field. Sitting gave athletes a chance to rest. Harbor, being a manager, had plenty of time to rest.

Chaos reigns supreme in this twisted mass of fibers and sinew. Junior Mark Bartlett joins the fray. Bartlett balanced his busy band schedule with practices for lacrosse.

The team prepares to go out and sacrifice life and limb for lacrosse. Such devotion was payable only by success.

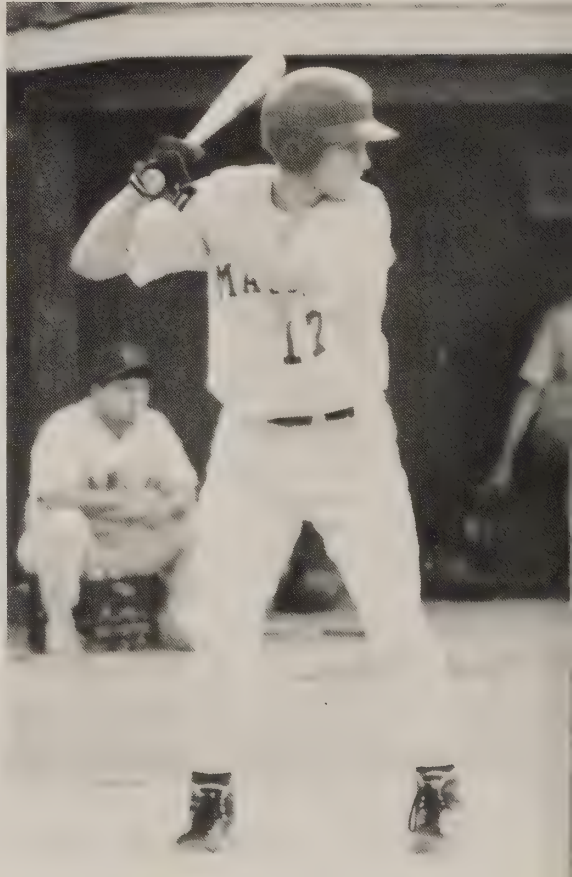
BASEBALL

The Mount Vernon Baseball team easily destroyed the minions of evil set upon them during the season, and dispelled them to the black soulless hole from whence they came. "Baseball is truly a man's sport," said senior Pat Hickey. "We did well every year, but I think the highlight of the year was our end of season parties," said senior Steve Cataldo. Parties indeed.

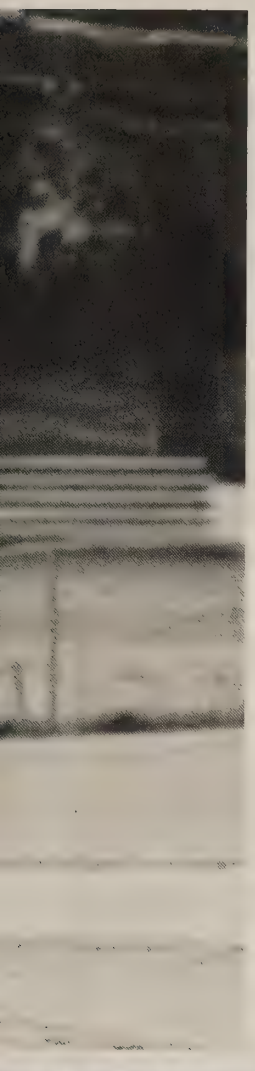
Though the team did lose a few games to some opposing teams, they fail to realize that they are mere pawns in MV's plot of total domination of baseball as a whole. We wait, all ashiver.

Graduate William Malerich winds up to throw the ball into a bat. Malerich received a scholarship to William and Mary for baseball.

Derek Besemer learns the true meaning of pain by making the ultimate sacrifice: his tendons. Ouch. But isn't learning what school's all about?

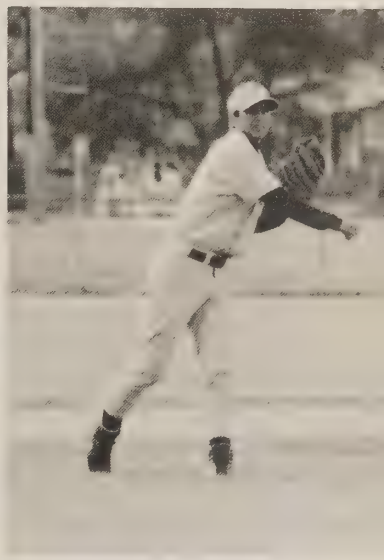


A batter gets ready to hit a high speed projectile. One of the teams strengths was in batting, or a twisted form of the latter.



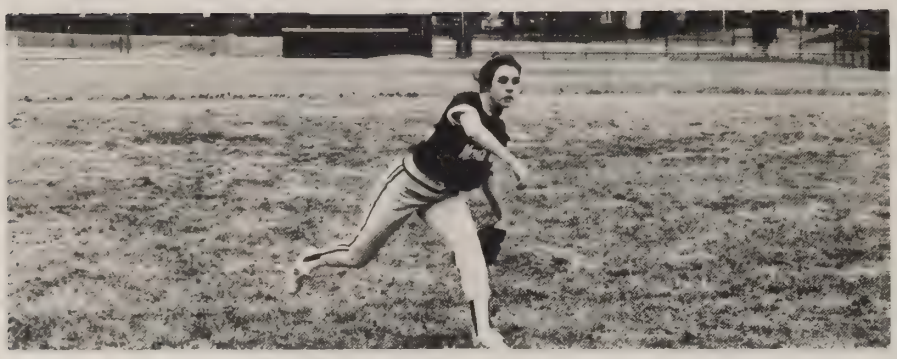
The baseball team joins along in the National Anthem, save the unpatriotic catcher.

A pitcher warming up for battle. A pitcher unwarmed up is like an old potato, covered with eyes, and things growing out of it.

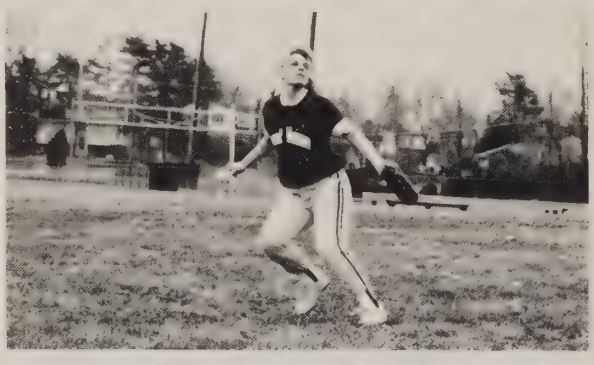


An easy out for this shortstop, during a scrimmage for practice. Hopefully he can pull off the same move when it counts.

A batter with the wrong idea.



Junior Gina Miller is the Varsity team captain. Here, she is trapped in limbo.



Senior Dawn Smoot runs to the backfield to catch a ball. Smoot was a right fielder.

"Dear Diary," writes Lara Henry, "I'm the head manager and statistician."

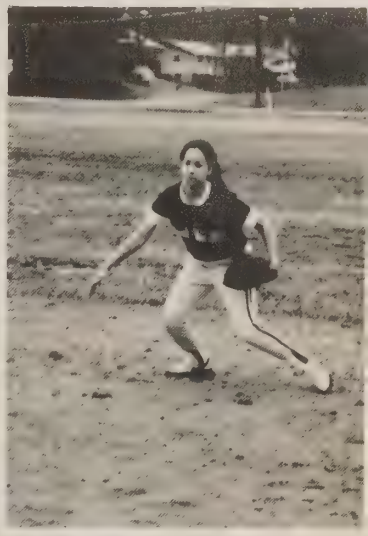
Junior Mandy Redfern pauses to stare into the sky for inspiration . . . actually, she's only looking up at a phantom softball.

Team Captains Senior Melody Westmeyer and Junior Gina Miller (who is also a left fielder) are caught off-guard by the all permeated camera.

Starting shortstop senior Chrystie Klar throws a ball to the right . . . Were this picture taken from the other side of her, however, the ball would be going left.

Sophomore Katie Kelly moves with deft, unnerving motions in order to throw the ball. Kelly was the team's catcher.

Junior Terry Kurfurst grimaces with desire as she delivers a pitch. Kurfurst was the teams pitcher.



Senior Melody Westmeyer waits, every cell in her body waiting to pounce on the ball.

Senior Dawn Smoot swings hard to make contact with the ball.

SOFTBALL

BALL ZOMBIES

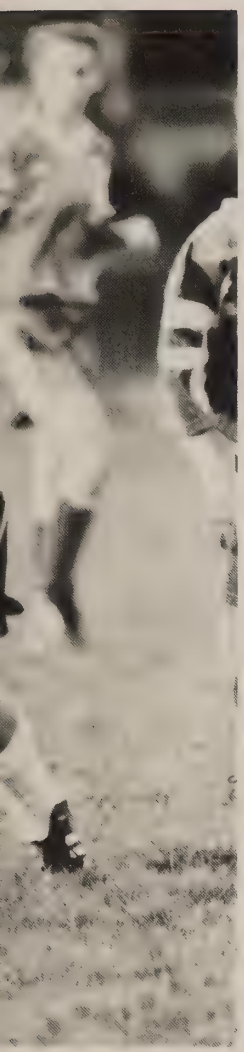
The snow melts, the birds return from their winter hideaway, the butterflies fall out of their moth coatings, and the smell of springtime can only be compared to the smell of sweaty soccer players. "We ought to be able to compete better in our district next year with re-districting, because we don't have to play Lee and Jefferson anymore,' 'said Senior Gia Gulino. But it's not all prancing about in the sun like little nymphs, rather, soccer takes a great deal of coordination and determination.

"The team captains did a great job keeping the team spirits up, even after we lost a game," said sophomore Jen Lorentzen. Practice proved to be a difficult challenge for the team, as the hours were long, and the sun was hot. Yet through it all they came off with a very good season.

Graduate Claudine Ebeid follows the simple but effective rule "left foot then right foot, left foot then right foot." As forward, Ebeid obeyed this rule often.

Graduate Nikki Baublitz hurdles an imaginary object. Such creativity was a must for anyone who wanted to create something to jump over.

Senior Allison Ady fires through the defense with a defiant sneer. Dribbling was a skill that must be learned, as shown here.



Sophomore Christy Carlson butts heads with an opponent, who happens to be from the opposite team as well. In competition, Carlson's competitive edge cut through her usually outgoing personality.

Graduate Megan Thomas stretches before a game. Stretching helped athletes not die when they got onto the field. Death could result in sprains and aches.

Senior Vallerie McMillan performs an ancient druidic luck incantation. The team went on to reap the rewards of cosmic alignment.

Sophomore Beth Buckley pauses to muse upon soccer as a whole. Long periods gave players off the field such reflective moments.

KICKBALL

Soccer, the version of rugby the Australians laugh at. What can you say about soccer? Where can you start? Perhaps with a quote. "Soccer is actually more violent than people might think. Personally I enjoy knocking people on their butts," said Senior Bill Schorr. This quote captures two of the essential characteristics of soccer: Violence, and tushies. And on the subject of tushies, upon being asked, Kim DeBrueler said, "I think guys should play field hockey. Why not? As long as they wear the skirt." Skirt, indeed.

Coach Tracy "the cab" Birrell and Coach T.J. "stun zeed" White both implied conquests of dominance thrusts into reality as the crow is thrust into the sky. We wait, all ashiver.

Phuangphet Amnathvong tastes the sweet bile of victory coating his tongue. Then he kicked the ball.

Coach Apt is confronted by a group of teenagers, all dressed in soccer uniforms. Apt used his supreme logical skills and grasped the moment to forge the Mount Vernon Soccer Team.

Senior Diego Acosta watches the ball he has just kicked soar into the distance, way to go, Diego.

Xayaphet Amnathvong defies the laws of physics. Soccer enabled him to be all he could be.

Senior Diego Acosta heads the ball. Heading became a habit and skill in life, and pretty funny to laugh at as well.

The Soccer team, all massing on the bewildered coach, feeding off his power like lampreys before a kill.

Jose Caballero kicks the ball at the funny man doing the Hustle.

ON YOUR

"Look!!! I am Jumping on your head!!!!" screams Senior Philip Salas, "Jumping, jumping, jumping!!! Bouncy Bouncy Bouncy!!! Up and down up and down!!!" Wrestlers found the sport to be very stimulating. (allegedly)

Junior class president Noah Kaufman is pictured here in a clotted mass of sweaty limbs. Kaufman reveled in the consecration of the act, the spasmatic throes of victory, the marrow of the contest.

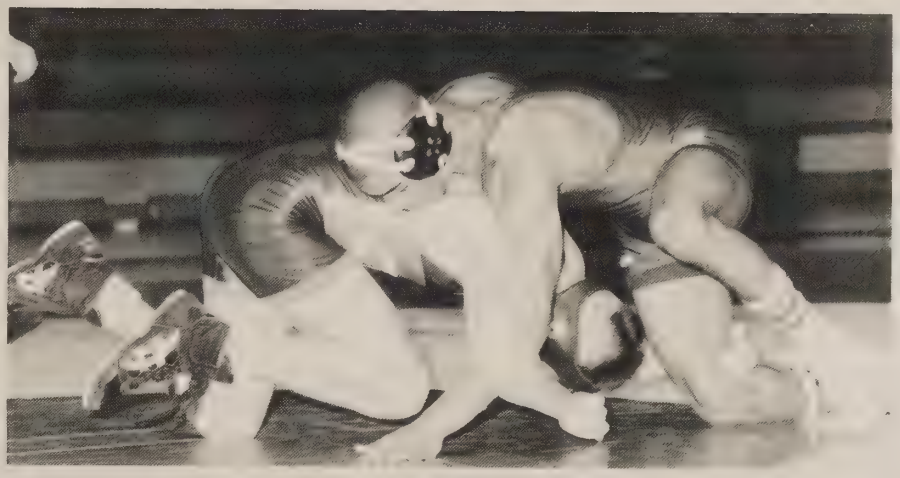
GUNSTON DISTRICT CHAMPIONS



Sophomore Kelly Hall is pictured here lulling his victim into a false sense of security. Then Hall went on to pin him down and enjoy a glorious victory.
(allegedly)

Senior Richard Johnson grapples with an opponent. Johnson was also the homecoming court King, thus he was a wrestler and a member of the homecoming court.

Sophomore Boyleston is here pinning an opponent to the floor. Boyleston was one of the more outstanding members of the wrestling team.

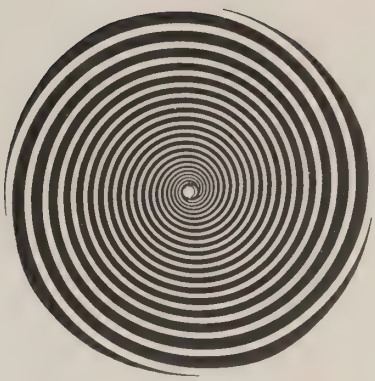
ACTIVITIES



After school and on weekends, students frequently found themselves participating in activites with their classmates. Some activites were even sanctioned by school.

Most clubs were organised for spesific purposes. Students Against Drunk Driving (SADD) perpetuated a campeign to educate others about the danger of drunk driving. Language clubs and honor societies orchestrated field trips and parties to glorify their chosen part of the world. The American Studies Club paid for all government students to visit Congress. DECA sponsered speakers for marketing classes. Bio II club led the annual beach trip.

Indoor and outdoor bands occupied lots of time for those involved. The marching band won Hermatige Band Competition. Chorus and orchestra gave concerts. The number of clubs insured that everyone found their own place.

Picture Perfect

Whether it was doodling, painting, or working with clay, students found ways to enjoy creating art. "Art is great when I need an elective," said sophomore Laura Bordeaux.

Expectations ran high throughout the year when art students and teachers found out that their funding and curriculum were soon to be greatly improved by the International Baccelaurete program arrived. Said Mrs. Virginia Daughtrey, "Art is alive, well, and thriving because of the talented students here. As long as students expect a lot, teachers will give a lot."

Autumn Girouard

"Art is PHAT," said senior Marty Kloster, "I have four classes of art every day."

"I' m not the son of god," said senior Mitch Rybicki.

Nearly all students were involved in art, whether they knew it or not. Little drawings done while chatting on the phone, theatre, and gymnastics all connected to art. Autumn Girouard, 10

Looking sexy and desirable in his low cut body suit and passionate red lipstick, art student senior Brian Langsdorf expresses his true feelings for Spirit Week. Many seniors took this chance to act wild and crazy as only people who have been in this school 4 years know how.

Glancing at the judges, junio Vicky Lawrence prepares her self for the time when she to can tumble and roll about o the soft, sweaty mats. The na ural grace and beauty of th sport makes gymnastics qualif as a completely form of art.

Juniors Kim Frye and Kelly Osborne sit on the bus on their Latin Club field trip. Most field trips used school busses, known as "breadboxes" or "cheeseboxes", to get from point A to point B.

Cold and wet on the Bio II field trip, students prepare an oxygen test of Ptotmac riverwater. The Bio II field trip was an annual event filled with water, crabs, and various other semi-aquatic paraphanalia.

Attempting not to be miserable during torrential rain on the Bio II field trip, students try to laugh it off. Field trips could not be canceled in the event of rain because evil administrators wanted students to catch pneumonia and die.

Site and Sound

Hardly anything excited students about school as much as field trips. A chance to learn in a different environment, have different teachers, learn to use different equiptment were well appriecated.

With budgets cut by the county, students who intended to go on field trips frequently had to raise money or pay a fee. But that didn't dissuade many. "I like field trips," said sophomore Bryan Godfrey, "especally ones with little organization."

All aboard! Toot! Toot! Field trips excited students about school. A chance to learn in a different enviornment, having different teachers, and learning to use new equiptment were very thankful. Autumn Girouard

The jellyfish were really slimy said Junior Lindsey Gainer.

Power Tools

Whether they wanted to accept it or not, academics is what promotes students to a higher level. Without a decent GPA and a good SAT score, it is difficult to continue on to the next stage of education. "I think we should work hard so we can become efficient members of American society." said Junior Noah Kaufman. Work and conform, that's our motto.

Mount Vernon was one of the relatively few schools in Fairfax County that will be receiving the International Baccalaureate Program in the upcoming years. This rigorous and demanding program will prepare students for the transition into college life. For those who earn a IB diploma, one year of college will be replaced.

Mmmm, . . . Those fetal pigs sure do look good," said sophomore Grant Graeber.

For some students, academics classes were not just a required course but also could be enjoyable. "During the AP Bio trip, I saw lots of neat animals like stingrays, jelly fish, and even a baby shark," said senior Neric Mosequeda.

Sophomore Brian Godfrey tilts back his head to take a sip from a jar of lambs eyes. Having taken biology allowed Brian to identify such delicacies.

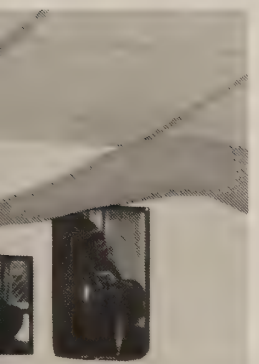
During the AP Biology trip classes collected specimens and tested the pH of water. It was fun playing in the water.

Sophomore Ainslie Pearsall considers gnawing her fist to a bloody pulp in order to escape math class. Some students had mysterious allergic reactions to the academic parts of school.

While handling Dr. Hatch's boa constrictors, Junior Joey Bowman and sophomore Autumn Girouard are open to Fruedian interpretations as to why snakes stick their tongues out.

Mr. Gerard places his faith in physics and prays a slight miscalculation will not send the bowling ball smashing into his lower jaw.

Jill Metcalf laughs when asked whether she would cook her rabbit for dinner if it were necessary, or not. When she realized the interviewer was serious, she was not amused.



Sophomore Sean McCullum with his extra sensory perception is actually aware of yearbook photographers' every move. Towards the end, yearbook photographers' power of invisibility was fading.

High Profile

Students had many oppertunities for leadership roles. Clubs, classes, sports, and numerous other activites that required orginisation needed officers.

Seniors John Nah and Pat Hickey were especially noticiable for their leadership contributions, so numerous that no one ever bothered to count them. "I kept my identity as Major Man an undisclosed fact." said John Nah. "I really enjoy being down on the floor during pep rallies because the floor shakes and it's almost like a trampoline."

"I'm only standing here because I can't be in Iraq," said senior Pat Hickey.

"Being my class Vice-President is really nice. I enjoy helping others," said senior Temerance Walker. Unfortunatly, most students did not know who their class officers. An unidentified junior, when asked who his class officers were, cleverly replied "Ummmm.." An unidentified sophomore replied "Glaah.." Autumn Girouard, 10

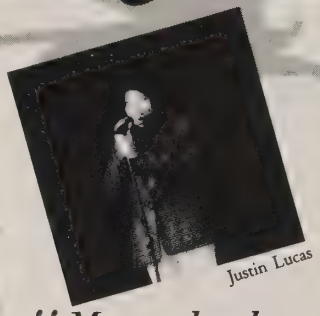
Money Talks



Justin Lucas

"My locker jammed so I was late to the talent show," explained sophomore Lindsey Papion, "but I still made it to the stage anyway."

And it says, "Please help our cause!" With budgets drasticly slashed to accomidate county budget balancers, clubs and sports resorted to fundraisers, especially candy sales. Distributive Education Clubs of America (DECA), Latin Club (LC), Future Business Leaders of America (FBLA), Chemistry Club, and others sold candy in clear plastic bags to tempt students to purchase their delicious tooth-rottening sweets.

Sports teams had car washes and orchestra held bake sales. These highly effective business techniques created more favorable bank balances for clubs in need of funds while creating less favorable balances for patrons. Jon Kimball, 12

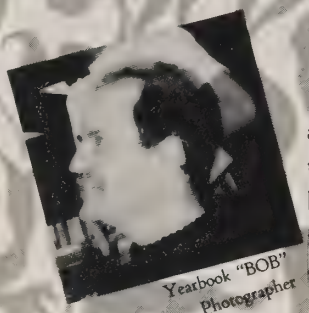
Common Cause



Yearbook "BOB" Photographer

"I really love the kids in Vegatarian Club," said English teacher Bob Ingalls.

By recycling a soda can members of ECS helped take care of the world. By donating old clothes DECA helped care for the homeless. Both of these clubs had the same purpose, to help society.

Many clubs such as SADD informed the student body about the dangers of drinking and driving using visual aids. "I think that educating the student body about the dangers of drinking and driving is very important, and even though I'm not a member of SADD, I will gladly participate in any activity they ask me to," said senior Jon Kimball (who incidently is a member of the yearbook staff, please don't kill me.)

Though clubs are very important, there are some ways to help out without being part of a group. Many teachers helped out with school activities even though it is not required. Some say it is important to set an example for the students while others just do it for fun. Whatever the reason, they should be held in awe for their godliness.

Faking It!

"Won't you try a glass of our wine?" asked senior Beeky Cullum to an elderly sophomore Sean Brayboy in one of 1994's dramatic productions. "Arsenic and Old Lace! All the hard work!" Advertising paid off when over 200 tickets were bought for "Arsenic and Old Lace". "The set," one parent said, "was spectacular."

During 1994, the theatre department tried a new experiment, student directors. When you consider how much experience these students had, the final outcome was remarkable. Of course, for all directors, actors could be a bit unnerving. "I'm a dam ed good director and if you think you'd have done a better job, I'd have liked to see you try," said drama teacher/director Mr. John Newman.

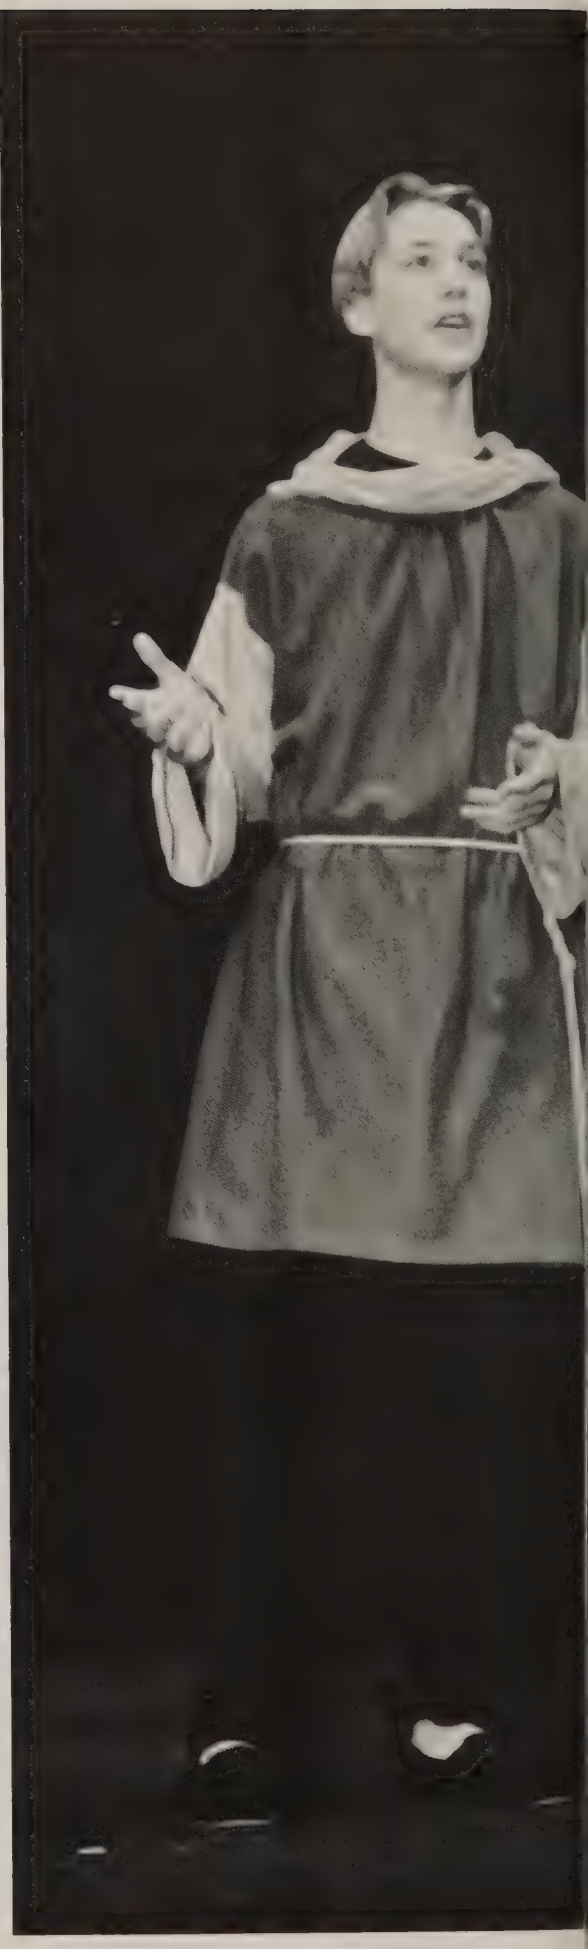
Lost on stage, sophomore Justin Lucas, juniors Tammy Duricka, Geoff Chatham, and gaduate Karen Jupiter, recover ungracefully. Throughout the one-act, "Stages", actors had to portray themselves in a constant state of confusion.



Explaning his presence to fellow performer Aubrey Coker, junior Geoff Chatam maintains a look of authority. Actors frequently had to play the role of several characters in the same play.

Arguing with her admirer, seniors Mike Silver and Gia Galino will not back down. The play "Oklahoma" contained beautiful voices and strong emotions from anger to happiness.

As their classmates improvise on stage, seniors Robbi Foreman, girl, juniors Adam Pierce, and Patty Ellis enjoy the show. Due to a lack of drama students, Drama 2, 3, and 4 were combined into a single class.

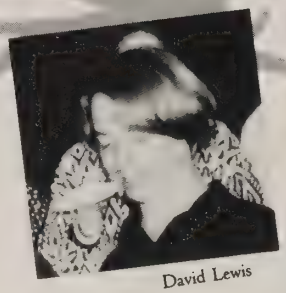
Enjoying a nice cup of tea, sophomore Justin Lucas, junior Brian Hackett, senior Sochenda Dan, graduates Nathan Wright, and Matt Keeton concentrate on their character's personal problems. Comedies were often hardest for actors when performing on high school level.

Hit Parade

The sound of music fills the halls of Mount Vernon as the Beginning, Concert, and Symphonic bands perform their seasonal concerts. The Marching Majors walk in step with the beat towards the football field to perform during half-time. Everywhere you turn music can be found and with it, are those who choose to listen.

For a five to ten minute show, it takes many months of practice to prepare, and even then the smallest imperfections are evident. Many new arrivals to the marching band found the intensity alarming. "I've never had to work so hard in my life," said freshman marcher Carrie Lowe. While the freshmen struggled to adjust, the sophomores sat back, perhaps remembering their first year in the band. "Band is a real PAIN," said sophmore Abby McKovac, "but I really needed a tan."



David Lewis

"Jazz band is really cool," said sophmore Grant Graeber. "It's like a free period where I can play my guitar."

For all the complaining that the band members take pride in, when marching season is over everyone seems at a loss. When asked what she was going to do, sophmore Ainslie Pearsall said, "We're going to Disneyworld."

Justin Lucas

"I'm really happy with this years freshmen choral students," said new chorus teacher, Anne Stahmer."

Even freshmen chorus members showed Moount Vernon new potential for the upcoming years."I really enjoyed this year in the choir," said freshman singer, Anne Harris. For some freshmen, the switch from middle school to highschool was hard to adjust to. "I wasn't used to putting so much time in to my electives,"said freshman chorus member, Carrie Sitnik. After making a few adjustments to their schedules, everyone settled down into a regular routine. Autumn Girouard, 10

Waiting to begin, the freshman chorus members concentrate on the upcoming performance. Sometimes it was hard for freshmen to compete with those who had been singing for many high school years.

Orchestra class plays its music with savage concentration. Violins wailing, they learned a lot this year.

The advanced orchestra class carefully practices a difficult piece. With diligence and work, music would actually be recognized when played.

Cello playing requires supple fingers, a keen mind, and patience. These two after-school players obviously have what it takes.

Jamie White, a talented junior, was not only gifted on the violin, but was also good on other stringed instruments. Her fingers were very practiced.

Mrs. Kervic. Orchestra. You figure it out.

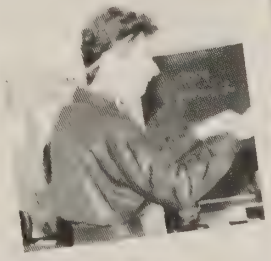
Symphonies

You may dream of softly serenading your loved one in a moonlit forest glade with soft strains from "Pachebel", but you may dismiss it as too sappy or foolishly romantic.

Well, some students didn't feel this way, and hats off to them. Without these romantically inclined people, the Mount Vernon Orchestra would be no more. Who else would master the difficult violin or the rigorous viola?

Said Senior Fred Pessaro, 'I really like to play my instrument. I've gotten pretty good at it over the years." Junior Jamie White said, "Playing the violin gives my life meaning. Without it, I don't know what I'd do."

With such dedication to the orchestral muse, it's no wonder that Mount Vernon's strings are in such great shape. There are only honors in store for these wonderful romantics. Romantics indeed.



"This year's orchestra is really talented," — Mrs. Kervic rforming was the goal of ery orchestral member, and was a goal they wanted to well. No one wanted to be t a "Fiddler on the Roof".

Even with the amount of time orchestra takes up, Mike Gilchrest shows that he can still have a good time. Partying relieved a lot of stress from tired players.

Global Windows

Everyone agrees that learning a foreign language is a beneficial activity for all concerned. Not only does it increase world communication, teach cultural awareness, improve personal relations, but it also is handy for getting an Advanced Studies Diploma. Senior Sarah Pollack said "I'm glad I know Spanish, because my family travels a lot, and I get to know people I might otherwise not have been able to." Sarah not only went through Spanish V, she also managed to complete German II.

"The by-mail Esperantos course I'm in is really neat. Of course, I haven't acutally heard it yet . . ." — Senior Jon Kimball

While being able to communicate with the natives is a good idea, as everyone in a first year language knows, it is not always possible at the lower levels. "I learned how to say 'the dog has eaten my appendix'," said senior Fred Leonard. Fred did in fact know how to say this, and indeed said it often.

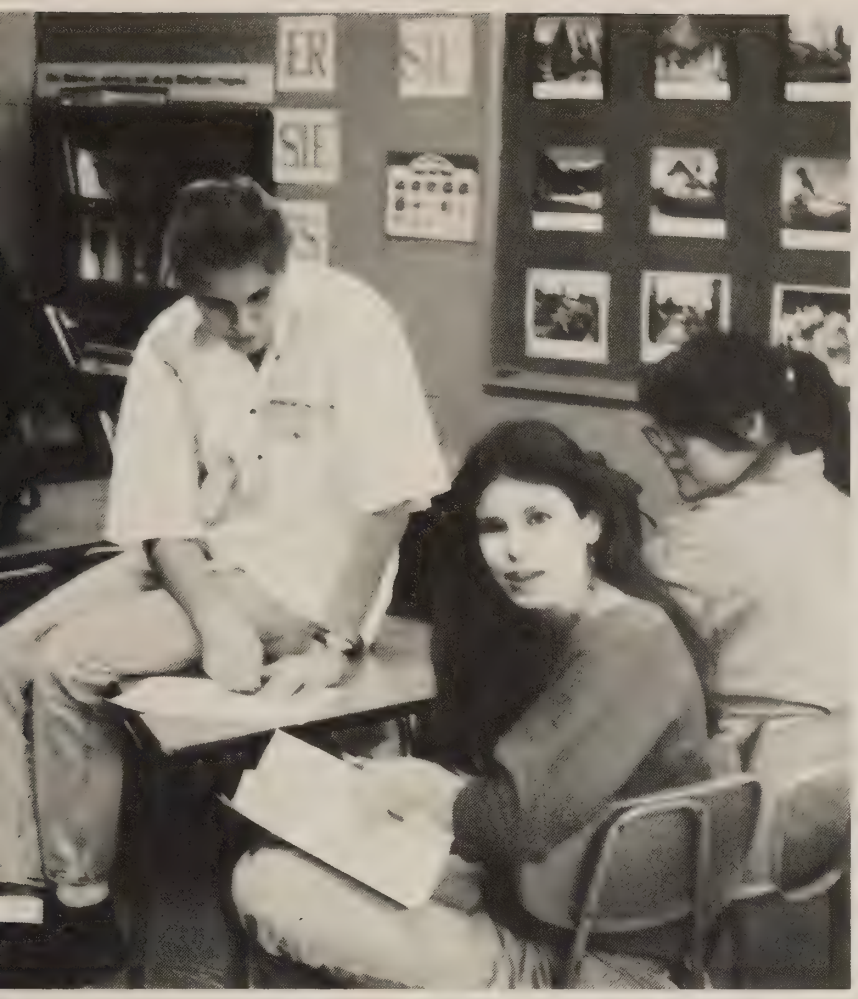
Whatever the language, whatever the reason, learning about another land is a lot of fun. Said junior Jeremiah Jourdan, "Some people say Latin is a dead language. Well I don't believe it! Latin is too cool for it to be dead. Vive la Latin!"

Way to go Jeremiah. That's telling 'em. (indeed)

Renown for its cultural diversity, Mt. Vernon embraced the languages and dress from foreign lands, countries, states, and planets. Klingon Warriors, while not numerous, were accepted as able administrators.

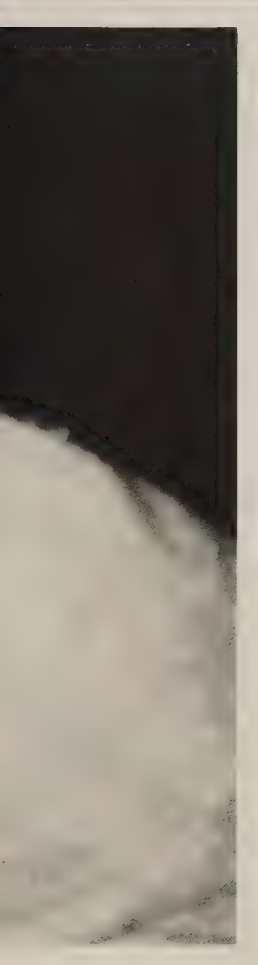
"Coach" Frerichs was called "coach" because he coached the winning wrestling team. He was also called "Herr Frerichs" because . . . er . . . well, we really don't know what that means. Probably because he was the German teacher.

Melly Mueller-Jensen didn't find it necessary to take a foreign language class because she already spoke German frequently. It was frequently proven that living in a different country for your entire life taught you all adequate grasp of the language.



Cool, spiffily dressed Mark Zahachewsky sauntered his way towards German class. Foreign language not only taught speaking skills, but also new manners for presenting one self to the world.

While Mr. Bob stands vigilant guard, Mr. Grover Vinson watches the pep rally intently. (No doubt, he was probably mentally translating into french)



Senior Chrissy Mittendorf studied french long and hard, and she used this knowledge for a variety of purposes. One of them was achieving an accent in a student directed play.

Looking rueful, junior Megan Graeber has just discovered that latin is not a language in the IB program. Her friend, junior Elaine Popublah(?) smiles because she knows that Megan is a junior and can't get an IB diploma anyway.

In Bold Print

"This place breeds chaos!" said the entire 1993-94 Yearbook staff. "It's not our fault!" The 'high' turn-over rate of yearbook staff members created an entirely new environment that frequently included mythical beasts and misplaced telephone calls.

Misunderstood bright red panic switches caused the destruction of more than one brilliantly written pages, resulting in what you see now. Never-the-less, the perserverring yearbook members marched onward with their love of the school and their fear of the student body. "I never said this," screamed students at varying intervals.

"No Yearbook Ninja Photographers!" said yearbook sponser Laura Cross.

A frequently expressed opinion of the yearbook staff was, "If you want it done better, you do it!" Fortunately (or -un, depending on your point of view) they were not taken up on this offer. The dedicated yearbook staff members spent the week before the final deadline working hours only otherwise known to Larry, the assistant building manager.

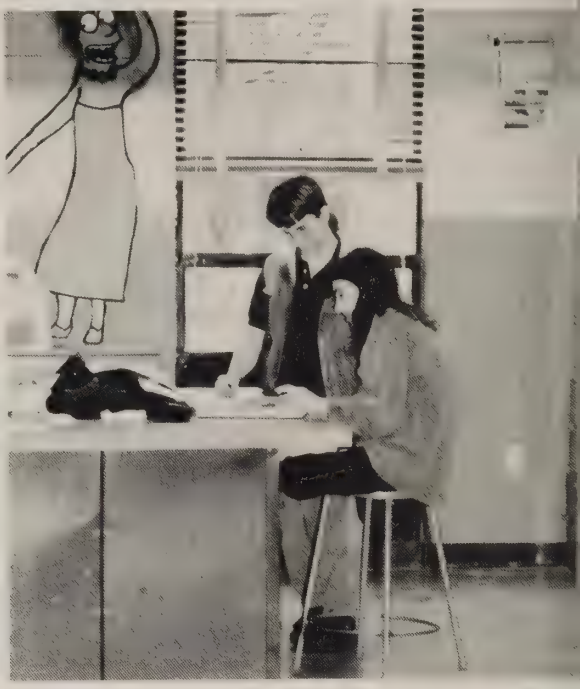
With the change of sponsor and the change of staff, a change of style was inevitable. Anarchy, anarchy, ANARCHY!

That says it all . . .

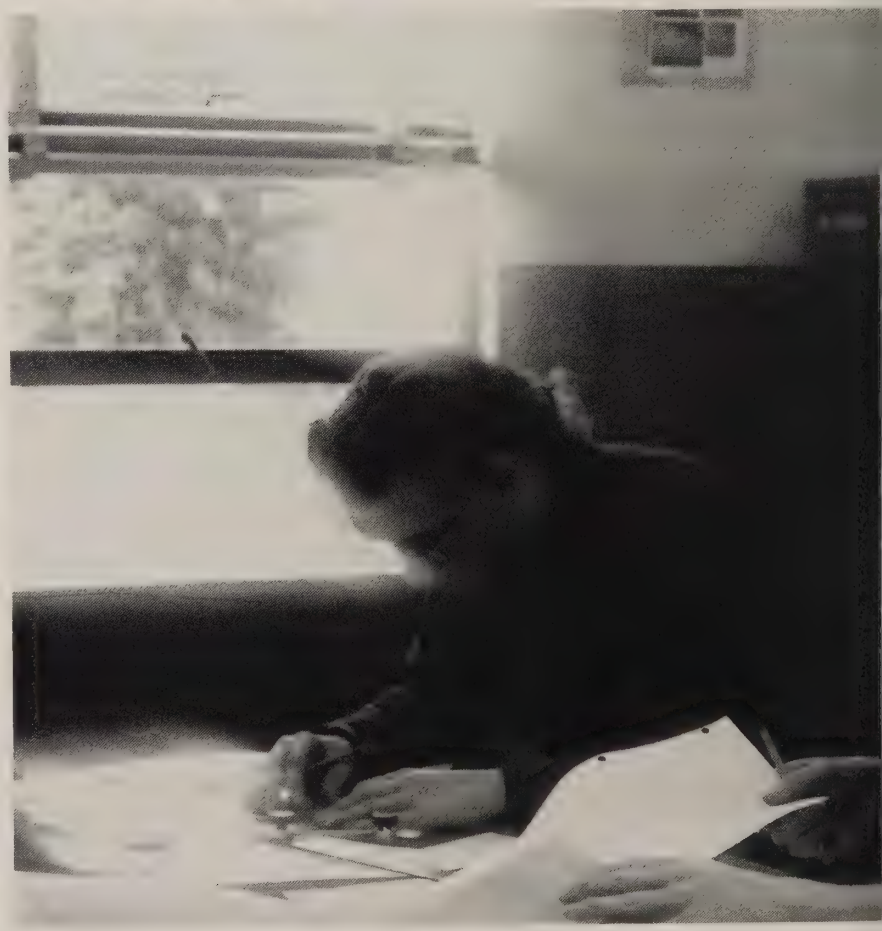
— The 1993-94 Yearbook Staff

Senior Jon Kimball and Sophomore Jen Saks ignore Marge Simpsons' desperate pleas for help as a wild strawberry devours her hand. There were some pretty weird people on the yearbook staff.

Sophomore Bryan Godfrey is distracted from his work as a large metal organism crawls into his ear. It did, however, make its way to his brain, where it wreaked unknown havoc.



Yearbook Photographer graces Oldsmobile Fred, our #1 fan, with a picture to remember him by. Fred experienced the same joys and frustrations as yearbook members did.



Sophomores Brian Godfrey and Grant Graeber make a last ditch effort to salvage the remnants of former yearbook materials. The act took incredible skill, and nerves of pewter, but the two were victorious, and went on to reap their rewards for such gallantry.

Like a werewolf, senior Sochenda Dan changes from her calm, collected self into a raging party machine during the full moon. She did not let this disability inhibit her work, however.

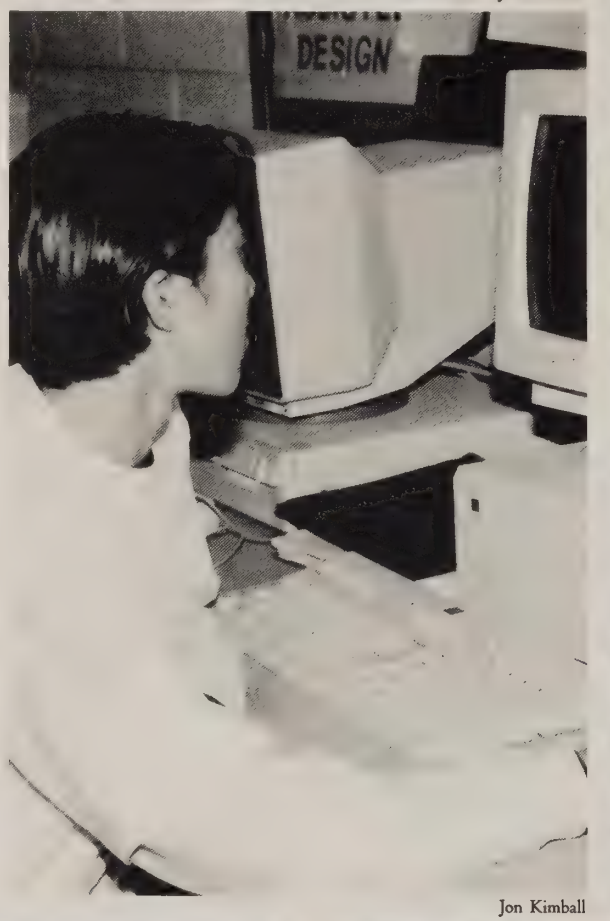
"Dressing" up for Spirit Week, senior Jon Kimball found it really is draftier. Jon joined yearbook on the basis that he will already be graduated and out of reach by the time people found out.

Yearbook member for a day Sal Harvey finds it convenient that he chose a fieldtrip day to join. We credit him with any incriminating or otherwise unacceptable pictures.

Unaware of the deadly green rays, undetectable by a black and white picture, sophomore Jen Saks and senior Brian Langsdorf continue working. After working on the 93-94 yearbook staff, Jen Saks wisely unlisted her phone number and address.

Jon Kimball

Main office secretaries were caught playing telephone by yearbook photographer. In the excitement of subschools the main office was often forgotten.



Senior Gene Chae is hypnotized by the glowing patterns emminating from the screen. The computer is your friend.

Video God Terry McConnell shares his vast knowledge with comparatively puny sophomore Sean Brayboy. Through the manipulation of innocent machines, Major News was created.

Senior Mike McKar ponders whether the box next to him is that of a shoe, or that of a doughnut. Mike was easily confused about such things, as are we.

Being reduced back to children, junior Jeremiah Stokes and playmate Sven tinker with their insignificant little toys. They enjoyed such childish activities.

"I'm sorry Dave, I can't do that," responds the computer to the command of 'Del*.*". Students were not allowed to tamper with the mainframe, lest they wished to be expelled.

In The Dark

There are many things to do in the dark. Even in school. (although we won't state exactly what they are) The dark, for some, provided a safe haven in which the student could perform acts of secrecy. However, that's not what we're here to talk about. Instead, let's talk about vocational classes.

Most of the vocational classes lacked air conditioning. However, this did not hinder the students ability to learn (or so we think. The heat could have caused brain damage, and we would never have known). Certain classes provided by Mount Vernon made it easier for newly graduated students to get a job immediately after leaving high school. These jobs were often used to buy things, like college. I'm sure the money was good for other things as well. "I haven't graduated yet, so I can't vouch on how useful the education has been to me." said Telal.

"THE JABBERWOCKY!" screamed one student, pushed to the edge of insanity. "REVELUTION EXECUTION! THE KNIFE!" yelled Senior Jon Kimball. The knife indeed.

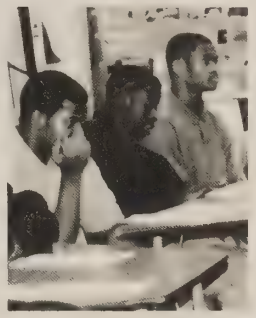
BUSINESS

The older students grew, the more they found interests outside school. Shopping with friends was a fovorate activity for many students. Learning to take part in the vast outside world as consumers frequently fazed students.

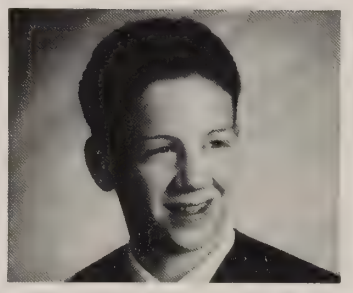


Marketing enabled students to overcome their fear of impersonal business instutions by instructing students in the art of infiltrating the ranks and bestowing helpful hints on bringing companies down from the inside. Razing large companies provided breathing room for smaller, friendlier "mom and pop" industries.

Buisness classes (pssst!) opened new doors for (hey, you!) students who (since you've read this far along, don't you think it's time to flip the page?) might otherwaise have not (there's a really good article on page 208) have had such oppertunity.

Community businesses, also helped further students' educations by providing monetary support for plays and publications. Other businesses hired students for their labor and to teach them how business works.

Dear Jason,



We are very proud to be your parents. May God grant you Peace, Health and Happiness and light your way all the days of your life. You are the BEST! Congratulations. We love you, Mom and Dad (M&D)

For the last four years, I have learned and experienced a lot of things at Mount Vernon H.S. These four years will be unforgettable for me. My teachers taught me lessons which I will probably never forget. I will miss this school, its students, teachers, especially a person whom I love a lot. Of course I can never write all of memories in just a hundred words, but given me this opportunity, I'd like to say thanks to all of my teachers, my counselor and everybody who helped me get to my goals. I really appreciate for your help. These memories will always live in my heart.

NEBIYOU TEKLE

It may seem difficult to face reality every day, but for one who dedicates himself to a better life and higher education, is most likely to make it to the future, which will be a life of success and an accomplishement. Mt. Vernon has helped me open new doors for my hopeful future. I thank all those who made it true (Mr. Vinson, Adamusko). Those who listen, stand up for your rights and find the spiritual liberation which is the only tool to free yourself from mental slavery and brain washing education.
